eastern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Ramsey, Eddy, Benson, Towner, Rolette, Bottineau, Pierce, and McHenry shall constitute the northwestern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Ward, Williams, Montraille, Burk, and Renville shall constitute the western division. The several Indian reservations and parts thereof within said State shall constitute a part of the several divisions within which they are respectively situated. Terms of the district court for the southwestern division shall be held at Bismarck on the first Tuesday in March; for the southeastern division, at Fargo on the third Tuesday in May; for the northeastern division, at Grand Forks on the second Tuesday in November; for the northwestern division, at Devils Lake on the first Tuesday in July; and for the western division, at Minot on the second Tuesday in October. The clerk of the court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place at which court is now held in bis district."

"SEC. 105. The State of South Carolina is divided into two districts, to be known as the eastern and western districts of South Carolina. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Abbeville, Anderson, Cherokee, Chester, Edgefield, Fairfield, Greenville, Greenwood, Lancaster, Laurens, Newberry, Oconee, Pickens, Saluda, Spartanburg, Union, and York. Terms of the district court for the western district shall be held at Greenville on the third Tuesdays in April and October. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Beaufort, Berkeley, Calhoun, Charleston, Chesterfield, Clarendon, Colleton, Darlington, Dillon, Dorchester, Florence, Georgetown, Hampton, Horry, Kershaw, Lee, Lexington, Marion, Mariboro, Orangeburg, Richland, Sumter, and Williamsburg. Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the report (H. Rept. No. 226) which I have prepared in explanation of this bill, which report is presented on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLINE). If there be no objection, the report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (8. 2750) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, submit the following report:

When the judicial-code bill was under consideration in the Senate and House, through oversight the committee failed to offer amendments to the sections defining the judicial districts of Mississippi, North Dakota and South Carolina, so as to have carried into those sections the new counties created in those States during the year preceding July 1, 1910.

This bill seeks to make the proper amendments, viz:

Sec. 90: By an act passed March 16, 1910 (p. 236), the Legislature of Mississippi created the county of George from territory taken from Green and Jackson Counties. The latter counties belong in the southern division of the southern district.

Sec. 99: During the year preceding July 1, 1910, the Legislature of North Dakota divided into counties all that portion of the State not within any organized county.

From that portion not so included, and lying south of the twelfth standard parallel, the counties of Hettinger, Adams, Bowman, Stark, Morton, Dunn, and a portion of McKenzle were formed; and

From that portion lying north of the twelfth standard parallel the counties of Burke and Renville and a portion of McKenzle were created.

With the exception of McKenzle County, the amendment proposes to place each county in the division to which the territory out of which they were formed belonged.

As to McKenzle County, it is proposed to place it entirely in the southwestern division, the court for which is held at Bismarck, rather than in the western division, the court for which is held at Bismarck are better than those for reaching Minot.

This is done upon the recommendation of the district attorney.

Sec. 105: By an act passed February 5, 1910 (p. 863), the Legislature of South Carolina created Dillon County from territory taken from Marlon County. The latter county being in the eastern district

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, those who have paid attention to the reading of the report will observe that the first object of this bill is to put new counties in the States of Mississippi, North Dakota, and South Carolina into their proper judicial districts. The committee having jurisdiction of the codification of the laws failed to note, when the matter was under consideration in the respective Houses, the changes necessitated by the creation of new counties, and the new counties in the three States enumerated in the bill were not placed in any judicial districts. This bill simply places the new counties in Mississippi in their proper judicial districts, and the same is true of North Dakota and South Carolina.

The other object of the bill is to amend section 186 of the judicial code as adopted by inserting a word that was inadvertently omitted. Section 186, as it stands in the judicial code, reads as follows:

SEC. 186. No person shall be excluded as a witness in the Court of Claims on account of color because he or she is a party to or interested in the cause or proceeding; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

The word omitted is the disjunctive "or" following the word "color." We amend it so that it shall read:

On account of color, or because he or she is a party to or interested in the cause or proceeding.

It is merely to correct a mistake committed by inadvertence, to perfect the law and make it as it should be. Member desires to say something, I ask for a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Clayton, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TERMS OF COURT AT NEWPORT, B. I.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2973) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 104 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 104. The State of Rhode Island shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Rhode Island; terms of the district court shall be held at Providence on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this bill is so well stated in the language of one of our judges that I take the liberty of reading some pertinent paragraphs from his letter to me:

"In abolishing the circuit court the act as originally framed abolished the principal terms for the transaction of jury busi-An amendment was proposed which made new terms of the district court to correspond with the terms of the circuit court which had been abolished, but the preservation of terms at Newport can only lead to confusion."

It is further stated that:
"No business has been transacted at Newport for many years. As the act stands, however, we should probably be obliged to bind over the greater part of our criminal cases to the Newport terms-a result which no one has intended and no one desires.

"Furthermore, the arrangement of the terms of court on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November for years ago in order that our trial terms was made only a few years ago in order that our trial terms might not conflict with engagements in Boston, either in the circuit court or the circuit court of appeals.

"For more than 20 years the only use of the provision for Newport terms for civil or criminal trials has been to cause the clerk and marshal to take a trip to Newport, open the court, and adjourn it to Providence.

"Unless this amendment can be made there is danger of great embarrassment which may arise from the necessity of binding over criminal cases to Newport, where there is no courthouse nor clerk's office and no facilities for the trial of cases."

This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for facilitating legal business by the abolition of a term of court at Newport, at once inconvenient and practically useless

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I can recall in the early days the fact of reading about Newport as a place for plutocratic residents. Is this bill another blow at plutocracy? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. No; I can assure the gentleman that it is not.

Mr. MANN. Have the criminals all escaped from Newport? Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The people want to have their cases tried in a place where there is a courthouse, a clerk, and all the other necessaries for the disposition of civil and criminal cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERMS OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN VERMONT.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up bill S. 1650, to amend section 110 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the law relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 110 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section 110 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 110. The State of Vermont shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Vermont. Terms of the district court shall be held at Burlington on the fourth Tuesday in February, at Windsor on the third Tuesday in May, at Rutland on the first Tuesday in October, and at Brattleboro on the third Tuesday in December. In each year one of the stated terms of the district court may, when adjourned, be adjourned to meet at Montpelier and one at Newport.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment

Amend by striking out the following words in lines 6 and 7 of the bill, to wit, "by striking out all of said section 110 and inserting in lieu thereof the following," and inserting in lieu of these words stricken out by this amendment the following words: "so as to read as follows."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "Newport" the Amend, page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "Newport" the following:

"Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holding of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Brattleboro, free of expense to the Government of the United States until the public building provided for by act of Congress shall be erected."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the amendment just agreed to I notice the use of the word "holdings" of the court. Does that not mean the holding of the court?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the plural word is the proper word, because more than one court will be held. Therefore I think it is proper to say "holdings," and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon putting in the singular form of the word.

Mr. MANN. I merely called the gentleman's attention to it. I think the usual form is "holding." I care nothing about it myself.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is a Senate bill, as the gentleman will observe

Mr. MANN

Mr. MANN. Yes; but this is a House amendment.
Mr. CLAYTON. The word "holdings" is a House amendment, it is true, but it follows the correspondence had on the subject with the judge there, and that is the reason why the committee put in the plural, "holdings." I think it is entirely a proper word, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will entertain the same opinion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to take the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table,

TO AMEND SECTIONS 1 AND 118 OF THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1911, ENTITLED "AN ACT TO CODIFY, REVISE, AND AMEND THE LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be amended so as to read:

"Section 1. In each of the districts described in chapter 5 there shall be a court, called a district court, for which there shall be appointed one judge, to be called a district judge, except that in the northern district of California, the district of Maryland, the district of Minnesota, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Oriolo, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington there shall be an additional district judges in each, and in the northern district of Illinois two additional judges, and in the southern district of New York three additional district judges: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the district of Maryland, senior in commission, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district: Provided further, That there shall be one judge for the eastern and western districts of Tennessee, and one judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge for the mothern district judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge shall reside in the northern district judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge shall reside in the district, or one of the districts for which he is appointed, and for offending against this provision shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor."

SEC. 2. That section 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 118. There shall be in the second and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges, in the fourth circuit two circuit judges, and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of $7,000 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I think the Clerk has read the wrong bill, not the bill called up by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that this is a bill on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I called up the bill H. R. 17595, and I have been informed that the Clerk has read an entirely different bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has reported the bill H. R. 17595, which is on the Union Calendar, and which the gentleman called up.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion going on that I could not hear what the Clerk was reading. I was informed that he was reading the wrong bill.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House now to make an observation. Every time bills come from the Committee on the Judiciary the chairman of that committee is besieged by Members asking about the nature and scope of the particular bill that has been called up. The chairman can not listen to the reading of the Clerk, listen to the rulings of the Speaker, and at the same time explain to individual Members who flock around him the contents of each particular bill. I desire to say this in all good humor, in order that gentlemen who are interested in these bills may hereafter examine the calendar and get the reports, whereby in a moment of their valuable time they may be able to understand the contents of each bill. That will save a good deal of confusion on the floor of the House and contribute to the orderly proceedings of this body.

As this bill is on the Union Calendar, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that under the rule the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that that automatic machinery get to work. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Sisson, will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17595, with Mr. Sisson in the chair.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read for the information of the House the report of the committee on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the Clerk will have The CHAIRMAN. to read the bill first unless the first reading is dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, it having been read in the House.

Mr. CARLIN. That will lay it open to amendment? Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No; not the first reading. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a

The Chair hears none, and the first reading of the bill is dispensed with and the Clerk will read the report.

Report No. 240 to accompany H. R. 17595.

Report No. 240 to accompany H. R. 17595.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," having fully considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that said bill do pass.

The committee beg leave to submit to the House the considerations which induced the committee to recommend the passage of the bill, in which recommendations the committee was unanimous.

There are at present four circuit court judgeships for the seventh circuit, consisting of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin. Circuit Judge Grosscup has resigned, leaving a vacancy in a circuit court judgeship. Since January 1, 1912, all circuit court judges became judges of the circuit court of appeals, which court consists of three judges. During the last three years there have been in the circuit court of appeals for said circuit 321 cases docketed, of which 34 cases were c.smissed by consent, 53 cases affirmed or dismissed without written opinions, and 198 opinions were rendered in the said three years. This is at a rate of 66 opinions a year.

In the last year in the eastern district of the northern division of the State of Illinois, in which Chicago is situate, and in which district there are but two district judges, it has been necessary to call in the assistance of Judge Sanborn, of Wisconsin, Judge Humphrey, of Springfield, Ill., and Judge Anderson, of Indiana, and these judges during the last year held court 156 days. With the increase in the jurisdiction of the district judges under the act of March 3, 1911, which went into effect January 1, 1912, commonly known as the judicial code, all nisi prius matters will come before the district court judges—chancery, common law, admiralty, bankruptcy, and all statutory and criminal proceedings.

Furthermore, one of the judges of the Commerce Court appointed from the seventh district may be assigned to circuit court duty in case a need should arise at the end of next year. The committee is of the opinion that there is a greater need for three district court judges for the said district than for four circuit court judges, and that therefore the abolition of one circuit court judgeship and the creation of one district court judgeship will be a step toward the more rapid administration of justice.

The committee has also ascertained that the Bar Association of Chicago, the two sitting district judges, and the press of the city are all of the opinion that the bill should pass.

The committee therefore, having carefully considered the entire question, recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Evans] such time as he may desire. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. EVANS. I should think about 2 minutes. Mr. CLAYTON. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes, or so much thereof as he may desire.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, this bill relates to Chicago and northern Illinois alone, not, as some gentlemen think, to Minnesota and other States. The confusion arises out of the fact that the amendment recites the provisions of the original act, which mentions several other States. The only change made by this bill is to change four circuit court judgeships to three and two district court judgeships to three. The reason for that is that, to use a Chicago Board of Trade expression, we are long on circuit court judges and short on district court judges. It takes now but three judges to constitute the circuit court of appeals, and we have four. One judge of the circuit court of appeals has resigned, leaving but three, and for the district courts we have not enough judges for the work, and the new law increases the work of the district courts. This is apparent. Now, it may be said by some that a circuit court judge may be sent down to do district court work. This is perfectly true, and yet I think there is not a lawyer in this House who does not know that if he has an emergency matter he has to go to a circuit court in the first place, he has to find the senior circuit court judge, and he has got to get him to agree that there is an emergency or a need of a judge in the district. He has got to get a certificate from the senior circuit court and the district court then has to determine what cases the judge shall try down in the district court. Now, it is also true that the district court judge may be sent to the upper court. The procedures are different. As one district judge writes me in support of this bill, he says that any practicing lawyer-while the law may be that one judge may be transferred from one court to another and back again, that any practicing lawyer who has tried to get a judge from the circuit court of appeals to come down and sit in the lower court knows he has difficulty in so doing, and there is therefore no occasion and no reason why we should go through this machinery.

As it appeared last year 156 court days were held in the district court by outside judges, while Judge Carpenter and Judge Landis were both working all the time. This is simply a detail for the more speedy administration of justice. Every newspaper in Chicago has approved of this bill. The bar association has approved of the bar association has approved of the bar association has approved of the bar association because of the same transfer of the tion has approved of it, and the bar association has approved of it because Judge Carpenter and Judge Landis, the districtcourt judges, recommend it. It is therefore a mere detail for a more speedy administration of justice which the people interested in Chicago have passed upon. One thing further may be noted. Judge Mack, of the Commerce Court, may at any time be sent back to the circuit court; he is already a circuit court judge; so that we have a plethora of circuit court judges, and we are certainly in need of another district court judge. A circuit court judge has resigned, and this bill simply provides that his vacancy shall not be filled, but that a district court judge shall be appointed instead. It seems to me that there can be no substantial reason for opposing this bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. MANN. Certainly.

I understood my colleague to say that the circuit court judge could only be assigned to sit in the district court in case of emergency.

Mr. EVANS. In the opinion of the circuit court judge. have first to convince the senior circuit court judge under the statutes that the conditions arising are such that a circuit court judge could be sent to the district court.

Mr. MANN. There is no question, as I understand it, of an emergency in the matter at all.

Mr. EVANS. It is not only a question of making application every time an emergency arises—and it arose last year for 156 court days—to the senior court judge, and if he is not there, to go to the Chief Justice, in order to get an order sending a circuit court judge to do the work in a district court when we ought to have enough district court judges there.

Mr. MANN. My colleague refers to last year, when the law in reference to the subject did not take effect until the 1st day of January this year.

Mr. EVANS. The district court judge, then, I suggest to the honorable gentleman, will now have the entire jurisdiction, and last year he did not have it. Yet last year there were 156 court days held in the district by outside judges.

Mr. MANN. But under the provision that is in the law that took effect the 1st of January a circuit court judge can be assigned permanently to sit as a district judge. It does not require a case of emergency. It does not require anybody to go to the judge about any case that is pending and where there is an extra number of circuit judges, as there is in two other circuits and will be also in our circuit when the Commerce Court judge now moves back to the circuit, as the law provides he will. I suppose one of the circuit court judges will be assigned. It has no relation to any practice in the past, because it is a new provision that we inserted in here to guard against just such a contingency.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Illinois is a lawyer as well as a statesman, even if he has been out of court practice for a number of years. The gentleman should take into account the fact that the bankruptcy business in Chicago is growing at a tremendous rate, and we have to anticipate the work of the nisi prius court is going to constantly increase. Here is an opportunity where we can add another nisi prius judge without any additional expense and cut off a circuit court judge that is not needed, and the growth of the practice will certainly require more nisi prius judges. Every lawyer knows that.

In the appellate court 56 opinions a year have been rendered, which court is composed of three judges—that is their average for the last three years—and yet we have four judges who compose that court. One of them will be idle most of the time. suggest that the main reason why we should abolish one office is that it is not needed, but we should delegate a judge where there is plenty of work for him to do. That is the sum and substance of the whole matter.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire any time?

Mr. MANN. I just wish to speak for a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any objection to the passage of this bill at all. As my colleague [Mr. Evans] has stated, the purpose of the bill is to abolish one circuit judgship in the seventh circuit and create an additional district judge in the northern district of Illinois. The occasion presents itself because Judge Grosscup, of the circuit bench, has resigned, and it is possible to abolish one circuit judgship without interfering with the tenure of office of any judge now holding office. Undoubtedly the bar of Chicago, which requested the passage of this bill, did so under the apprehension that the existing law, taking effect the 1st of January, was the same as the law in effect prior to that date. And under the law in effect prior to that date it was difficult at times, or at any time, to have a circuit judge sit as a district judge, but when we abolished the circuit court, as we did in the judicial-title act, and provided only for the district court and court of appeals, we provided that any circuit judge might be designated either by the senior circuit judge or by the circuit justice to sit as a district judge. And the only effect of this bill is to pay a man who holds court in Chicago a salary of $6,000 a year instead of $7,000 a year. It is to be presumed that ordinarily where there were four circuit judges the junior circuit judge would be assigned to sit in the district court. The situation will arise in our district in Chicago later. Judge Mack has been appointed as circuit judge from the seventh district, sitting in the Commerce Court. But in the course of a few years, under the law he will go back to the circuit, going out of the Commerce Court, and probably because of the great amount of judicial business in Chicago will go back to his home and hold court there, and will then be the fourth circuit judge.

There is no special need now of more circuit judges in Chicago. That is true with respect to the court of appeals. Mack or some other circuit court judge will undoubtedly be assigned to hold district court; and the same thing is true of the other two circuits in which there are four circuit judges. But if the people out home have expressed a desire, under a mistaken apprehension of what the law is, to have a district judge instead of a circuit judge, I shall interpose no objection, but at the proper time shall offer an amendment, endeavoring to increase the salaries of all of the district judges and the circuit judges on this bill.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in assuming that the bar association and the Chicago judges who ask for this change were not aware of the law that went into effect on the 1st of January. The suggestion was made to me by the honorable member, and I have in my possession letters from Judge Carpenter, of the district court, and members of the bar association, stating that they are well aware of the change in the law; that the proposition they submit is really one that addresses itself to lawyers who know the difficulty of getting judges to sit in a lower court from an upper court. I do not differ from the gentleman at all as to what the law is, but the bar association did know and Judge Carpenter did know of the change of the law at the time they made this recommendation

Mr. MANN. I understand that the law has been called to the attention of these gentlemen. I have talked with some of the judges on the Federal bench in Chicago in reference to it. There is a division of sentiment and of opinion in regard to the bill, although I do not think that is material here. I have talked also with some of the lawyers, who suggested, at least in one instance, that they did not know anything about the change of the law. They admitted, they said, that they did not know what the effect of the change of the law would be. We put the provision in the law for the express purpose of covering the contingency that exists in that and in other circuits. I think the wisdom of Congress was called upon amply to provide for that contingency, and I think Congress did provide for it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to my two colleagues, both of them representing Chicago districts. It may be said that this is a matter that does not concern me. Yet I believe this circuit is composed of the States of Indiana, Wisconsin, and Illinois. Am I right?

Now, there are four circuit judges in that territory; three judges and one vacancy, as I understand it. Here is a proposition to make one less circuit judge and increase one district judge for the Chicago district.

There are three judicial districts in my State; one the eastern, one the southern, and one the northern. The law provides that the district judge shall reside in the district. listened with much interest to the gentleman who was so forceful in enacting this legislation-my colleague Mr. Mann. I think we all voted for it and thought it good legislation. It went into effect on the first day of this year, I believe. But lo and behold, before the first 30 days have passed around it is proposed now to amend that law, which has just recently gone into effect. Why? The other gentleman, my colleague Mr. Evans, says it is troublesome to get a circuit judge to preside. "Oh, no," says my other colleague Mr. Mann, who helped "Oh, no," says my other colleague Mr. Mann, who helped enact the law; "there is no trouble about that. We had that in mind, and now a circuit judge can do, and it is his duty under the law to do, the nisi prius work where it is necessary. There is no trouble about that at all.'

Now, I will tell you where I think the milk in the coconut is. If a circuit judge is appointed it would be from a circuit composed of the States of Indiana, Wisconsin, and Illinois. If, however, this law is amended, and the circuit judgeship is abolished, we have a district judge at $6,000 a year, and the gentleman says he is going to offer an amendment to make the salary $7,000, the same as that of a circuit judge, and he is to be appointed from the Chicago district, cutting out the other two districts of Illinois and all of the States of Wisconsin and Indiana. That is blessed by a statement that the Chicago bar want it that way; that the two district judges want it that way, and therefore the press in Chicago want it that way. Ergo, be still and let it pass. [Laughter.] I am against it. I do not want to march up the hill one day and have a law go into effect on the 1st day of January and then repeal it for the reasons specified; and I trust the House, understanding the thing fully, and the absolute nonnecessity for doing it, will let the law stand as it is. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe the matter is thoroughly understood by the House, and I ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no general debate, the bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be amended so as to read:

"Section 1. In each of the districts described in chapter 5 there shall be a court, called a district tourt, for which there shall be appointed one judge, to be called a district judge, except that in the northern district of California, the district of Maryland, the district of Minnesota, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the northern and southern districts of Ohio, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington there shall be an additional district judge in each, and in the northern district of Illinois two additional judges, and in the southern district of New York three additional district judges: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the district of Maryland, senior in commission, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district: Provided further, That there shall be one judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, one judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, and one judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge for the middle district of Alabama shall continue, as heretofore, to be a district judge for the northern district thereof. Every district judge shall reside in the district or one of the districts for which he is appointed, and for offending against this provision shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 2, line 7,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 2, line 7, by inserting after the word "additional" the word "district," so that it will read "two additional district judges." This seems to be an accidental omission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 7, by inserting after the word "additional" the word "district."

Mr. MANN. All through the bill where the district judge is referred to he is referred to as the district judge, and in the other parts of this bill where additional district judges are

Mr. EVANS. This is the language of the act.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is not the language of the act.

Mr. CLAYTON. I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. This second to have a parentially accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

tleman from Illinois. This seems to have been an oversight in drafting the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is quite evident.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the amendment is entirely proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 2, after line 23, by inserting as a new section the fol-

"SEC. 2. That section 2 of the said act of March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Each of the district judges shall receive a salary of $7,000 a year, to be paid in monthly installments."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order against that amendment Mr. MANN. I had just as lief have the point of order passed upon at one time as another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-

GERALD] reserved the point of order. I make the point of order now that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Committee on the Judi-

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill has for its purpose the amending of two sections referred to therein, which purpose is manifest from reading the bill. It is not intended by this bill to deal with the question of salaries or the amount of compensation of judges at all. That is introducing an entirely new subject matter into the bill. The bill itself does not deal with, but leaves the existing law as it is on that subject. In that phase of the question the amendment is a novation, so far as this bill is concerned. It is a new proposition, sought to be grafted onto it, and it is not related to the bill as presented by the committee.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. May I suggest that it is not ger-

Mr. CLAYTON. No; if the amendment were in order; otherwise it is not germane to this particular part of the bill where the gentleman offers it. Mr. Chairman, it is well known that two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related. This bill deals with the subject of judges and not with salaries of judges. I do not desire to discuss the point any further, but refer you to subdivision (d), section 781, of the Manual, Digest, and Rules of the House, under the heading "Subjects not necessarily germane because related."

Mr. MANN. I did not offer it to the first section of the bill. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is not the part that fixes the salary. Unless you are taking up that particular section, I do not think it will be in order.

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose, to take up that particular section. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to amend the judicial act. The bill itself proposes to amend two sections of that act. It proposes in one section of the bill to fix the salary of the circuit judges; that is section 2 of the bill. It is quite competent, so far as the question of germaneness is concerned, in my opinion, to amend any other section of the bill, certainly as to any other section of the bill similar to the section now before the committee.

The first section of the act and the first section in this bill fixes the districts; the second section of the act fixes the salary of the district judges. Section 118 of the law and the second section of this bill fixes the salary of the circuit judges and fixes the number of circuit judges. It certainly can not be contended that on a bill to amend an existing law, when the amendatory bill itself undertakes to fix the salaries of certain officials, and undertakes to fix the number of other officials, that it is not germane to fix the salary of the additional official. It can hardly be contended that when it is proposed to provide an additional district judge for the northern district of Illinois it is not germane to fix his salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not germane to fix the salary of every other district judge.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York does not seem to comprehend that this is a reenactment fixing the number of district judges. Here is a law fixing the number of district judges all over the United States, and it certainly is competent when you undertake to fix and provide for district judges and what their salaries shall be. Would anyone contend that if you brought in a bill to provide an additional district judge at Chicago it would not be a germane amendment to fix his Yet these gentlemen seem to assume that the only thing in this bill is that which differs from existing law, but this bill covers the whole subject. It has been frequently held where you are amending different sections of an act that it is in order and germane to amend any other section of the act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the subject matter of this bill is the proposition to amend two specific sections of the act of March 3, 1911. There is nothing in this legislation which affects the compensation of the district judges. is nothing in this proposed legislation to which such an amend-The compensation of the district judges has ment is germane. been fixed by an entirely different statute.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York contend that the salary of the district judges is fixed by a different

Mr. FITZGERALD. A different provision of law.

Mr. MANN. But by the act of which this is amendatory-Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois has not shown his usual resourcefulness by citing any of the numerous decisions to which he refers as sustaining his amendment. The amendment proposed must be germane to the subject matter of the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. The object of the bill is to amend section 118 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary." Why would not a motion to amend any section of that act now be in order? It would be in order to repeal the whole act at this time, would it not? Suppose an amendment was offered to repeal the whole act, would not that be in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would be in order under a decision that where an existing statute is proposed to be amended in more than one respect an amendment to repeal is in order, but that ruling came about in a peculiar way. It came about because an attempt was made, and it was held that it was not in order to offer as an amendment a provision to repeal an existing law to a bill proposing to amend the law in one respect.

But the subject matter of this bill is the provision to fix the number of district judges. There is nothing whatever in the bill about their compensation. It seems to me that it is not germane to attempt to fix their compensation.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentle-an yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. Formula of Pennsylvania. Does not the purpose of the bill, as disclosed in the title, indicate the intention of the committee to amend the whole section and not a particular word in the section? It is specifically pointed out in the title that the purpose is to amend sections 1 and 118. Section 118 refers to two things—the number of judges and their salaries. not say that the purpose of this bill is to amend a certain word of section 118, but the intention is to amend the whole section. Having indicated that, why is it not germane to amend any line or word of the section?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois is not proposing to amend any portion of section 1 or 118 of the act of March 3, 1911. He proposes to amend a section not enumerated here at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This morning we passed Senate bill 2750, amending section 90 of the judicial title, section 99 of the judicial title, section 105 and section 186 of the judicial title. Does the gentleman contend that when that bill was up for consideration no amendment could be offered to it amending any other section of the judicial title?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if such an amendment had been in order, I am quite certain that the gentleman from Illinois would have proposed his amendment to that bill. out having examined the bill to which he refers, on his own I am inclined to believe that he must have been convinced that his amendment would not have been in order, otherwise he would have offered it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice the gentleman is very skillful in sidestepping an answer to the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, fortunately for me, I am not called upon to rule upon all of the hypothetical cases that the gentleman from Illinois may suggest under the rules of the House. One can imagine what my predicament would be if I were to spend all of my time endeavoring to pass upon all of the cases that could be suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York think that with a Senate bill covering these four sections to which I have referred, some of which could have no possible relation to each other and did not relate to anything like the same subject matter, the House Committee on the Judiciary could not have reported an amendment to the bill respecting another section of the judicial title?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question before the committee is-Mr. MANN (interrupting). The same question, precisely, that I asked the gentleman and which he has sidestepped.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. What the Committee on the Judiciary might have reported and what might be in order as an amendment to a bill that is reported are two different matters

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not contend that the committee could report an amendment to the judicial title and that a Member on the floor could not offer from the floor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When that question is presented to me I shall be very glad to examine it.

Mr. MANN. That question is presented now to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall examine such a proposed amendment when offered. I do not intend to mislead the Chair

Mr. MANN. A committee has no greater power to offer an amendment than has a Member on the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). By answering questions of such character when they have absolutely no bearing on the matter under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair does not find in the casual examination that he has had time to give to the matter any precedent, but if it were offered now to amend the whole of this section, to strike it out, the precedents are uniform that that amendment would be in order. Section 1 of this bill deals with the districts and the district judges throughout the United States. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order, and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. This bill proposes to create an additional district judge in Chicago, who under the existing law would receive a salary of $6,000 a year. That salary is wholly inadequate for a district judge in Chicago. We pay our ordinary nisi prius judges there $10,000 a year, both superior and circuit judges. Recently the legislature of the State passed an act, which, however, was not approved by the people, fixing the salary of the municipal or police court judges at $8,000 or $10,000, I think $10,000 a year. I myself thought that was too much, but $6,000 a year is not a fair salary for a judge in those large cities. I do not doubt that for a salary of $6,000 or even possibly a less salary it is quite possible to obtain quite competent lawyers as judges. Still it seems to me that we can afford to pay them a reasonable We ought not to expect men on the bench to work for Recently we increased the salaries of the Supreme Court judges from $12,500 to $14,500. Those may not be the exact figures, but in any event we increased their salaries $2,000 Yet it is said that one of them who recently died left practically no estate.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to inquire if the amendment which the gentleman has proposed is broad enough to increase the salaries of all of the district judges throughout the United

Mr. MANN. The amendment would increase the salaries of all the district judges.

Mr. FOWLER. I will be glad if the gentleman will inform me as to the number of such judges, if he has the information.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is one in every—I have not the information.

Mr. FOWLER. Between 90 and 100.

Mr. MANN. I think there must be that many.

Mr. FOWLER. So, if the gentleman's amendment passes, it will add to the appropriation $1,000 for each one of these

It would; probably $100,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, not being a lawyer, I may not know much about courts nor very much about judges. In this day when we hear of men getting large sums in the practice of law for corporations and where they get retainer fees amounting into the thousands, $6,000 a year may seem like a small amount, yet when we consider that a lawyer who has been appointed a judge receives that appointment for life, it is a place to be sought after by lawyers. So far as the necessaries of life and comforts are concerned, a man who can not live on $500 a month is not a very economical man. And while it is pointed out that a Supreme Court judge died a short time ago, after serving for many years on the bench, and left but little property, yet I dare say in the United States to-day there are probably not 25 per cent of the lawyers who receive this amount of money, and any one of you can count among your acquaintances men who have practiced law, who have been good lawyers, who have been brilliant lawyers, and with all their practice, when they came to die, they were poor and left but little estate. They were not insured $10,000 or $14,000 or $6,000 a year during their lifetime, but have had to struggle in the world for what they got. The same conditions exist in the practice of medicine. I regard a man who could go in the practice of medicine with an insurance of $500 a month for the balance of his days and work on the line of work in which he was educated is the greatest fortune that could come to a physician, and I regard a lawyer when he gets a reasonable amount that he can live on, though he may not save much money, it is true, yet when he gets a competency that keeps him the balance of his life, takes care of his family and educates them, the public has bestowed upon him one of the greatest blessings that can be bestowed upon a professional man. And so it is with these judges that in the course of years they are retired and then their pay goes on. Where in all the vocations of life do you find such a favored condition as that? I do not believe that it should be the policy of this House to increase the salaries of these men beyond what they are now receiving, and I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will adopt this amendment. As a member of the Judiciary Committee and as one who has been interested in leads.

ciary Committee and as one who has been interested in legislation respecting the judges of the country, I have of necessity given a somewhat exhaustive examination of this subject. Last session the Committee on the Judiciary of the House reported out unanimously a bill favoring very much more sub-stantial increases of salaries of both the district and circuit court judges than is proposed here. Before that committee there appeared a committee of the leading lawyers of the United States, coming from all sections of the country. We had hearings occupying one or two days, and the unanimous testimony of all those great lawyers was that the salaries paid to the Federal judges of this country were really a disgrace to the Nation. The salaries paid by all the other great nations of the earth is so largely in excess of the insignificant sum paid to our judges that it amounts almost to a reflection against our reverence for the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman examined the salaries received by the supreme court judges of the supreme courts of the various States; and if so, does not he know that in nearly all of those instances that the Federal judges get much more money than those in the State courts?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to that query, that is not the result of my study of this question. I know that in some of the States the salaries paid to supreme court judges of the State would not equal those paid to the Federal judges; but in the majority of the States, in my own State, in the State of New York, and in all the Middle Western States, according to my recollection, the salary is below the salaries paid to the judges of those States. That fact was impressed upon our minds at the hearings to which I refer. Instances were given where judges who had been serving the country with great credit and with ability had resigned because the salary was insufficient to maintain their families.

It was urged upon us at that hearing-and we all know it to be true-that the man who is selected as a judge and goes upon the bench is and ought to be a man of large legal attainments; a man of years of experience, thoroughly trained in the science of the law; and a man competent, by reason of those qualifica-tions, to earn a large salary. The difficulty in securing the best men in the country to accept these positions is apparent to men who have investigated this subject, when you come to consider the great official limitations that are placed upon these men. Every man who occupies a place on the Federal bench, if he has money to invest, is restricted as to the investments he could make. It is absolutely impossible for him to accept emoluments from any other source; his entire earning power is measured by his salary.

Mr. EUTZGERALD. I understood the gentleman to say that Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood the gentleman to say that the Committee on the Judiciary in the last Congress went thoroughly into this matter of the compensation of Federal judges.

How much was it in the bill you reported?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that we reported in the bill for district judges $7,500 and for circuit judges $8,500. It was that much, if not more. The bill as originally introduced by me and presented to the Judiciary Committee carried $9,000 and $10,000, but the report of the committee, according to my recollection—and I know it was not less than that—carried $7,500 for the district judge and $8,500 for the circuit judge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania $7,500 was sufficient?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Not by any means.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why trifle with these judges and offer them what seems to be an inadequate salary?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is difficult to answer that question seriously. It does seem to me when an opportunity is afforded to give them some increase we should not ignore it because we can not get all we want.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The opportunity is not afforded to do that. The gentleman is mistaken in the premises.

MOON of Pennsylvania. I think the opportunity is afforded. We have already increased the salary of the Supreme Court justices $2,500 a year, and we should now do some measure of justice to the district judges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. In those two minutes I only desire to say that I trust the Members of this House will take into consideration the fact that these judges are inadequately paid; that it is necessary to select the judiciary from the highest type of legal talent in this country; that the highest interests of the country demand that the corporations who seek to evade our laws are seeking and always secure men of that They are necessarily unlike men in any other profession which I know. Their freedom is more circumscribed and their professional duties are more exacting, and they should be at least moderately compensated.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask, if the gentleman will yield, what pensions these gentlemen now get?
Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. They get a pension at the age of 70 equal to the salaries they receive. And I want to say, to the honor of the judiciary, that they do not retire at 70. I could cite a great number of district judges and circuit judges who have served five and six years beyond that period, and that is true, as we know, of the great justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. They do not retire at the age of 70, and therefore the retiring provision amounts to practically little. And I hope, therefore, with this opportunity being afforded to the House to testify and indicate their appreciation of the great judiciary of this country, they will vote this meager addition.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that this bill, which has for its object a very simple purpose, which is to facilitate the trial of cases in the district court of Chicago and to designate a judge to do work there who may not feel called upon to do it under the general law as imperatively as he would if this act were passed-I had hoped that this bill, which comes with the unanimous recommendation of the bar of Chicago, of lawyers there who know what they want and what is for the best interests of the administration of public justice, would pass as was suggested by the bar of Chicago to the Committee on the Judiciary, through the medium of the bill as drawn by the gentleman-from Illinois [Mr. Evans]. I had hoped that there would be interposed no objection whatever to it, and I am exceedingly regretful that this proposition to increase the salaries of the district judges should be injected into the measure now, when it can have but one possible effect, in my opinion, and that is the defeat of the bill. I take it that this House would rather this bill should fail than to engraft this whole new proposition upon the measure. I, for one, would rather this bill should fail than to have the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] passed. I would rather deny this reasonable request, proffered by the bar of Chicago, and this good measure in the interest of the admin-istration of public justice, than to have adopted the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to increase the salaries of district judges.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question, this proposal to increase the salary or compensation of district judges. It has been before this House in one form and another many times during the last decade. Not many years ago these district judges were allowed $5,000 a year salary. It has been increased during my membership in the House of Representatives to $6,000 a year, and provision has also been made, in addition to their salary of $6,000 a year, to give these judges their expenses when they are away from their homes or actual residences on official business.

It seems that Congress has been liberal in dealing with the district judges and that the law now relating to their compensation is liberal. We know, Mr. Chairman, that whenever in the life of a district judge two things concur he is retired upon his salary for the remainder of his lifetime. Whenever he shall have served 10 years and shall have reached the age of 70 years, he can retire on pay. It seems to me those judges have been singled out from all other classes of civil employees so as to be cared for in their old age, so that they might feel independent while discharging their duties as judges and not feel compelled to engage in other business pursuits.

That seems to me to be a wise law, and I have no disposition to disturb that law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the salary proposition ought not to come up at this time in this way, to amend a bill which has for its purpose the remedying of the situation in Chicago. This proposition as to an increase of salary is a larger subject than any mere locality, and it is unfortunate, I think, that it should have been injected into this measure at this time.

Now, I want to make an observation in reply to some remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], who seemed to derive great satisfaction from the fact that some judges have served after they had reached the age of 70 years. I think, Mr. Chairman, that members of the bar, and I believe of the judiciary, too, who have not reached the age of senility themselves will, as a rule, agree that a judge ought to retire when he reaches the age of 70 years. It would have been better for the country, for the public service, for the administration of public justice, had judges always been compelled to retire from the bench when they have reached the age of 70 years. I am told that a distinguished public servant after years of valuable public service proposed to resign his office, and his friends and admirers protested and said, "You are in the very zenith of your intellectual powers and you ought not to qult." He said, "That is the reason of my quitting now, because I am in full possession of my intellectual powers. In a few years I will lose a part of my intellectual vigor, and then I will not have sense enough to resign and let somebody else discharge the duties of the office." [Applause.]

I intend, Mr. Chairman—and it is not new with me—at some time to draw and introduce a bill compelling judges to retire from the bench when they have reached the age of 70 years, else forfeit their right to draw any salary when they do retire. [Applause.] Army officers are allowed to retire at the age of 62 and are forced to retire at the age of 64. I see no reason why a judge should not retire or be retired at the age of 70, after he shall have served at least 10 years.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, within a week there was held in this city a convention of civil-service employees of the Government for the purpose of securing legislation granting pensions to all of the civil employees of the Government who become sick, disabled, or too old to render efficient service. Two of them from my home city of Syracuse called on me, one representing the post-office clerks and the other the letter carriers, and requested me to favor such legislation. I did not promise them I would favor that measure, but in the course of our conversation or argument they said to me, "You pension our judges, do you not; and you have from time to time increased their salaries?" I answered, "Yes; we are pensioning our judges, and if I had my way about it they would get no pensions—that is, I would not vote to pension any employees of the Federal Government high up in the service, who, during the active years of their lives draw big salaries, and if prudent and economical can save some part of their income for their support in their old age. If I favor a pension for any class of Government employees it is the poor men and poor women who can not save much during their many years of service, and who, if thrown out of employment when they are old, disabled, and superannuated, have nothing left on which to live." I did not expect to have the opportunity so promptly to make my promise good, but I stand for that statement now. [Applause.]

I will not vote to increase the salaries of men high up in the Government service and who are now drawing large salaries until the condition of the Public Treasury is such as to warrant an increase of the salaries of employees lower down in the service. I believe in consistency and fair treatment of all the people who work for the Government in all grades of service. What can we say to the poorer employees, when they ask us for an increase of their salaries and when they ask us to relieve their burdens, if we increase our own salaries and the salaries of judges and other high-salaried officers of the Government? It is much easier and agreeable to say yes than no to people, especially when those people are friends who ask us for an increase of salary out of the Federal Treasury.

If they get what they ask they will think they have received only what they are entitled to. If they do not get what they demand they may remember it and think they are not properly treated. However, the Congress is only an agent of all the people in the making of appropriations, and the executive officers, agents in the expenditure of those appropriations, whose duty is to see that the Government gets the value of the money spent. The money which the Congress appropriates does not come out of the clouds, but is a tax on all the people and especially on those least able to pay it. Taxes may be levied on imports, on homemade goods, on corporations, on incomes, or in any other way which the ingenuity of man may devise, but ultimately and in the last analysis the men and women throughout the country who work do, and in the future will, have to pay such taxes; and the public generally on whose shoulders the burden of taxes falls should watch more carefully than they do the manner in which appropriations are made and the purposes for which public moneys are expended.

This question came up suddenly to-day by an amendment offered by our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], else we could have more data to submit in opposition to this proposed amendment.

In the last session of Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], who has just addressed this body, tried to amend the law increasing the salaries of district and circuit judges. That question was thoroughly thrashed out at that time in an extended debate. Facts and figures were submitted from all parts of the country showing that the great majority of the State judges are receiving much smaller salaries than those now paid to district judges of the United States court. If you increase the salaries of our district judges, the State judges whose salaries are smaller will demand that their salaries be raised to that of the United States judges who live in their States, and they will use every advance in the salaries of the Federal judges as a lever to boost up their own salaries. That is the way in which salaries are generally increased. The man who wants a larger salary says, "This man gets so much, and am I not entitled to as much? Do I not work as hard? Are not my duties as responsible? Should not I be as well paid as he?" This accounts for much extrav-

The proposed amendment a year ago, after full consideration, was defeated by a substantial majority. I am aware that $6,000 a year is not a large income for a prominent lawyer in the city of Philadelphia, the city of New York, or the city of Chicago, who is in the full swing of practice and earning large fees; but it is a good fair income for the ordinary judge in almost any other part of the country. Perhaps not more than one in ten of the lawyers of the country earns as much one year with another after his office expenses are paid, and it is more than the great majority of the highest judges in the several States of the Union now receive.

Again, the United States judges, district as well as circuit and Supreme Court judges, receive pensions after they arrive at the age of 70 equal to their salaries when in active service. There is no position in the public service more attractive or comfortable to a lawyer in his declining years, when he doesn't care so much for the wear and tear and strife of trial work, than a place on the bench. He holds his position during life or good behavior and can be removed only by impeachment. He enjoys the honor and the dignity which the members of his profession always concede to their members who are elevated to high judicial positions. While other members of the bar have to keep up the struggle in life with younger men in order to make a living and support their families, the judge has no occasion to worry about his livelihood from year to year, the support of his family, or for the future. He has the best kind of insurance against sickness or poverty in his old age, because his Uncle Samuel is rich and the pension is sure and liberal.

How many attorneys are there in this House who would not surrender their uncertain tenure of office for a seat in the district court of the United States at its present salary? Does anyone claim that an increase of salary would increase the character, personnel, efficiency, or honesty of those judges? Does any man here claim that the increase of the congressional salaries in any possible way raised the character or efficiency or industry of Representatives or Senators?

The Japanese have an old saying that when a nation's civil ervants begin to love wealth and its fighting men begin to love life, then the end of that nation is not far distant.

This has particular application to the high officials in the civil government of a nation and the officers in its military establishment, and means that if a nation's legislators, judges, and executive officers think more of their salaries, emoluments, and pecuniary rewards than of the honor and dignity of their positions and of serving their country to the best of their ability, the civil government of that nation is on the downward course; and if its army and naval officers when engaged in battle think more of saving their lives than of winning the victory, they are doomed to defeat. This is not a mere formula, but a living, controlling principle in Nippon. Her statesmen and jurists value more the honor of serving their countrymen in an official capacity and striving to raise the civil government to a higher degree of honesty and efficiency than of the modest salaries which their relatively poor country can afford to pay; and her fighting men, from the highest in command to the low est in the ranks, when in the face of the enemy, vie with each other for the position of greatest peril and freely offer their lives for the honor of their flag and the glory of their country. That spirit of self-abnegation and devotion has raised them in a few years from a hermit people to one of the foremost

Our history is replete with examples which measure up to this Japanese standard. Able statesmen, jurists, and executives have served their country for meager compensation compared with their earning power. They have esteemed more highly the honor of their offices and the opportunity of doing something worth while for their country than the accumulation of wealth by the capitalization of their great reputations. Is this proud record to be lowered in the future? Are high positions in the public service to be belittled by reducing them to the dollar standard? Will the honor and distinction which go with these high and responsible offices and the confidence and approval of their countrymen have no attraction for men who are qualified to fill them with credit?

A Federal judgeship is a place of unusual honor and power. The judge is raised above his brethren at the bar. If, in accepting a seat on the bench, a lawyer makes some money sac-rifice, he is compensated by the dignity of his position, the security of his tenure, and the deference accorded him by the bar and the public. The judges who have rendered the most valuable services and left their impressions on the institutions of our country have been those who thought more of rendering sound and righteous judgments than of their salaries.

When a vacancy occurs in a Federal court, is there a dearth of candidates? Are there not always so many able and honest men who are not only willing but anxious for the appointment that the President is embarrassed in making a selection? They know what the duties are, also the salary and pension. The lucky candidate who wins the prize and gets the appointment should be content with the salary, or resign.

The Constitution, which provides that the compensation of judges shall not be diminished during their continuance in office, does not go far enough. Every constitution in a government like ours, whether of the Nation or the States, should provide that the compensation of high officials in the government should neither be increased nor diminished during their continuance in office or at any time after their election or appointment to such offices. Such a provision would tend toward economy and peace of mind.

In conclusion let me say that we are facing a deficit in the The Congress and the administration are Public Treasury. trying to economize. The amount involved here is not large, only about $100,000 a year, but it is the example which it would set. It is the principle that I object to in raising the salaries of men who do not need them and refusing to raise the salaries of men and women lower down in the service, who are as faithful and efficient in their lines of duty and actually do need increased compensation. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment in line 5, after the word "of," by striking out the word "seven" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I supposed this bill was intended by its author to give relief to a locality where business is congested. I feel quite sure from my limited knowledge of the amount of business transacted in the city of Chicago that this bill would give that desired relief. I had no idea when the bill was presented that anyone would ask for another relief, which I think is not warranted.

That relief which the bill originally sought is justifiable, but when it comes to the question of tacking on an amendment in-creasing the salary, I think it is time to call a halt. I understand that these honorable judges received $5,000 a few years ago for their salary. They lived upon that amount, and I never have heard of one of them resigning because of the inadequacy of the salary. I do not believe that there is a Congressman on the floor of this House who would resign such a judgeship, carrying with it the magnificent salary of $5,000. seek, Mr. Chairman, rather to cut down the appropriation than to increase it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he is aware of the constitutional provision that the salary of a district judge shall not be reduced during his continuance in office?

Mr. FOWLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman raises question which may be potent, but if my amendment carries it need not affect the salary of a man who is in office during the term of his appointment, but would apply only to newlyappointed district judges. There are many instances where the salaries are both increased and decreased by new acts or by amendments to existing laws, but they are not construed by the courts to violate constitutional provisions. But in reply to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Lafferty], I desire to say that there is another legal proposition which provides that salaries can not be increased during the term of office. Here is a new position being created, and that new position is for the purpose of taking the place of what might be styled legislation for an additional judge.

Mr. Mann. Will the gentleman rigid?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague allow me to read the provision of the Constitution with reference to this matter?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. MANN (reading):

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Mr. FOWLER. In reply to the gentleman, my colleague [Mr. MANNI, I wish to say that if my amendment to his amendment is adopted it need not apply to any officer or to any judge during his present term of office, but it may apply to the new judgeship that is sought to be created by this bill, and may fix his salary at the sum of $5,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have no ulterior purpose in is amendment. I have no design upon the judiciary of this this amendment. country, but I want to call the attention of my friends who are in favor of increasing the salary of district judges to the fact that we have State courts in every State in this Union.

I have been inquiring of gentlemen who sit around me as to the various salaries paid to the circuit judges of the State courts, and I find in that limited investigation that their salaries run from $3,000 to $5,000 annually. You must remember that these men hold a circuit court in which they are compelled to go from county to county at large expense. Their duties are as arduous as those of the district judges of the United States courts. Their time is as fully employed, their expenses are much larger, and their salaries in most instances are far less than the sum fixed by the amendment which I propose to this bill, that of $5,000 a year.

Mr. Chairman, there is another vast difference between the two classes of judges. The circuit judge of the State must go to the people and ask them if he can sit on the bench and try The Federal judge gets his place by appointment, and it does not cost him the raising of his finger to get it. Then, Mr. Chairman, when he retires at the age of 70 years, or later, if he sees fit to hold on, he gets a princely pension to retire upon in order to support himself, and the State judge

I want to ask you gentlemen what explanation you are going to give to the citizens of your district when you go back home and tell them that you voted a few days ago to pay men $240 a year to go down on the market in this city and clean up garbage every day in the year, Sunday, if necessary, included, and soon thereafter stood on the floor of this House and voted to increase a princely salary of $6,000 to $7,000? [Applause.] I want to know, Mr. Chairman, what you gentlemen are going to say to the people who elected you and sent you here to make laws for them—the common people, because they are the people who carry the great majority of votes [applause]; I want you to say to them what you have done for them during your term of office here; then I want you to tell them what you have done and tried to do for men high up in office-tell them how you tried to increase their large salaries-yes; salaries already big enough for the support of a king. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note the progress that some gentlemen make during their service in the It is interesting to note that sometimes the conditions in the House change and the opinions of some of the Members in the House in respect to some questions change with the changed complexion of the House. I am not impugning at all the motive of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in offering this suggestion, in the shape of this amendment, to increase the salaries of these judges. Perhaps he was wrong on a former occasion, and I take it that he thinks he is right now. I do not question that he thinks that he is right now, but I think that when he served in this House and his party was charged with responsibility and he and his party had the right to so act on this matter as to increase the salaries of these judges he was right, when charged with responsibility, in refusing to increase them. Now, when he is not charged with responsibility, and when that side of the House is not charged with responsibility, he changes his views and offers to increase the salaries of all of these judges. Times change and men change with them. I shall not undertake to give you the Latin of that old adage, but will leave that to my good friend Speaker Clark. Suffice it to say that we have this condition here to-day: That on December 7, 1910, the distinguished leader of the Republican side in this Chamber, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], able, adroit, industrious, conscientious at all times, when his party was in control had a certain view in respect to this matter, and I am going to read from a colloquy that occurred in debate at that time:

Mr. Mann. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I will not undertake to say that I am in favor of increasing the salarles of judges. I would be very glad for some gentleman to offer an amendment on that subject and let us try out the House as to whether they are in favor of increasing the salarles of judges.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mann. I see no reason—

Mr. BUTLER. My friend is in favor of increasing the salarles of judges?

judges? Mr. Mann. To which friend does the gentleman refer?

Mr. Butler. The one who is standing; the only friend I have. [Laughter.]
Mr. Mann. I have never declared myself so, and I have always voted against them.
Mr. Butler. To those who are favorable toward increasing the salaries of judges I suggest not to attempt it through this bill.
Mr. Mann. Why not?
Mr. Butler. In an entire Calendar Wednesday we have passed 3 pages out of 203, and at this rate I see this bill's death during this session. Think of it, 3 pages!
Mr. Mann. The gentleman is mistaken. We have done very well. We commenced with this bill at half past 2 and closed general debate, but if we had the naval bill up reported by the gentleman we would have been three or four days on general debate without making any progress.

have been three or four days on general debate without making any progress.

Mr. Butler. I never reported a naval bill. I never stood high enough in the House to report anything—

Mr. Mann. When the gentleman does, in the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. Butler (continuing). Because others had places I thought I should have. [Laughter and applause.] Some gentlemen had all of the places. Hereafter they will be divided. [Applause.]

Mr. Mann. If the gentleman wants to increase salaries, this is a very good time to do it. The matter is before the House. The opportunity is offered to the gentleman, who thinks he can carry it through this House, to increase the salaries that have already been increased once in the last 10 years. If any gentleman of the House thinks he can put through a provision to increase the salaries of judges, let him try it now. The opportunity is here.

Mr. Parsons. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Foster of Illinois. We are not complaining of the Judiciary Committee if they will not offer the amendment now.

The Speaker pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. Parsons. The point of order is that we have considered section 2 and the Clerk has reported and read section 3.

Mr. Mann. The gentleman is mistaken; he is always mistaken on a point of order. I doubt whether the gentleman would recognize a point of order.

Mr. Parsons. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks some gentleman, the gentleman from New York, rose and addressed the Chair before the Clerk began the reading.

Mr. Mann. And I have a motion pending to strike out the last word of section 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. Mann. No gentleman is willing to offer an amendment; then let us put in no more time at this session in talking about increasing the salaries of judges of United States courts.

Mr. Chairman, so say we now. Let us put in no more time discussing this subject, but pass this bill, which will afford relief, and on some other occasion, when a Democratic administration is in power and the country is not confronted with a probable deficit, we can take up and discuss at length the question of the salaries of these judges. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to retract from the statements which the gentleman has just read, quoting from the RECORD of some time ago. At that time the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the distinguished gentleman from Alabama is now the chairman and was then the ranking Democrat, had already reported to the House, or had agreed to report to the House, as I recall it, a bill increasing the salaries of district judges to a point much higher than is now proposed. I did not think the bill could pass.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentle-man to correct him? The gentleman from Alabama never did offer such a proposition.

Mr. MANN. I did not say the gentleman from Alabama offered it. I said the Judiciary Committee had reported or intended to report such a measure, and when it was reported my recollection is that it came to the House with a unanimous report from that committee. I dared the gentlemen then who were in favor of increasing the salary of district judges to a much higher salary than now proposed by me to bring it on the floor of the House and let the House settle it without expressing any opinion of my own in reference to whether it ought to go through or not. Subsequently I did bring before the House a proposition in the consideration of the same bill to increase the salary of the Supreme Court justices of the United States $2,000 a year, and it was agreed to. I brought before the House in the consideration of the same bill a proposition to increase the salaries of circuit court judges from $7,000 to $8,500, and yet the gentlemen in the House said they could not support that because it carried no increase for the district judges, so this time I have commenced at the ground and worked upward, commencing with the district judges. I said in the consideration of that bill—which by the way, notwithstanding the fears of my genial friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], did become a law, was passed by both Houses, and went to the President-I said then that the chance to consider a proposition which gentlemen were in favor of was when the opportunity presented itself, and while I have frequently, when in charge of a bill on the floor of this House, seeking to prevent proper or germane amendments to it, urged Members not to vote for an amendment which had not been considered, I have always felt free and shall continue to be free where I am in favor of a proposition and the opportunity presents itself to bring it before the House, to do it then. I have been in this legislative body long enough to know that it is very well to be in favor of something that can That is idle; but if you are really in favor of never come up. a proposition, bring it up when you can, and I have got this up and it takes a vote.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] furnished an opportunity for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to get his records together. [Laughter.] I was sorry, however, that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, who seldom ever makes a mistake, made the mistake of implying or insinuating that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is ever inconsistent. He is always wrong, therefore always consistent with himself. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has offered to this bill because that is wrong, too. If it were not for the Constitution I would be inclined to support the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. Fowler], who is much nearer right than the gentleman from Chicago. Since I have had the honor of being a Member of this House it has not occurred once in a while but very frequently that this question has been brought up in some form or another and generally by Members on the other side of the aisle, who lash themselves into a frenzy and deliver panegyrics on the great characters who serve the country in the capacity of district and circuit judges. The fact is I have been watching the course of events and find that many of those elevated to the Federal bench are lame ducks who once had seats in this or the other end of the Capitol. After the next election there will be more men hunting vacancies and the President may have the opportunity to make other appointments before the expiration of his term. In addition to judges furnished by the House and from the other end of the Capitol we find many gentlemen from the States, good lawyers, distinguished lawyers, pure men, good men, who have been promoted to these places. But I for one will never subscribe to the doctrine for one minute that a Federal judge who has behind him, so far as the world knows, onl; the approval of the President, with all other influences back of him a profound secret, unknown to the public, is entitled to more credit, more honor and respect, than a man who goes before the people of his State and secures election at their hands. As was stated a moment ago by the distinguished gentleman from Chicago, Mr. DRISCOLL

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. From New York. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I beg the gentleman's pardon, and I hope he will not invite me to leave the room because I did not intend to say that. [Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. He would if you had said Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I say I was interested in the speech of the distinguished gentleman from New York. expressed a thought here awhile ago worthy of being reflected upon. He called attention to the fact that this Congress readily yields to every sort of suggestion made to increase salaries already munificent and great, but has no time to hear the appeals from 100,000 people in this District, who are working for salaries scarcely sufficient to pay the daily expenses of the household. Now, I want to say frankly I am not in favor of a civil-pension list. I do not believe I ever will vote for such a measure. I believe it is the worst form of paternalism. Nor am I in favor of pensioning or increasing the salaries of every man who wins presidential favor and gets a circuit court judgeship or a district court judgeship.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] reminded me of some poetry—something I seldom think of—and that is a stanza of poetry which is entirely apt at this time. Longfellow wrote the lines, which I quote:

A blind man is a poor man, and blind a poor man is, For the former seeth no man, and the latter no man sees.

That seems to be true here.

Why do not some of you gentlemen, who are so vociferous in demanding increased salaries for circuit judges and district judges, make an appeal for the poor fellow, for the poor man, who is working by the day?

Mr. MANN. We did the other day and you knocked it out.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. When? Mr. MANN. On the District bill here.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. On the district bill? I have been threatening to do this for some time, and I am going to do it Sometimes gentlemen profess things which they do not really believe, and sometimes, in the language of Lady Macbeth: False face must hide what false heart doth know.

Your side did not favor it, and I venture the opinion that you will not say you favored it or expected legislation on that bill.

Mr. MANN. Your side did not favor it when it came from this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the amendment here proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to increase the salary of Federal district judges from $6,000 to $7,000 a year. No valid reason has been offered for this increase. Simply because a man is clothed with the ermine of a Federal judgeship is the only justification that has been attempted. They say it is to get a higher grade of men. Where are they to come from? Are not the very best lawyers in this country, at the salaries now paid, asking for these judgeships? Are they getting them? Who is getting the Federal judgeships of this country? I would be glad to see made public the recommendations upon which the Federal judgeships are appointed. While you are making publicity laws for campaign funds, why would it not be proper to have published the recommendations upon which the appointment of Federal judgeships are made in this country? It is a life tenure of office, a matter with which no man ought to be clothed, and I hope to see an amendment to the Constitution providing that, instead of the President appointing these judgeships for life, they will be appointed as other judgeships, for a specified term or chosen by the electorate of the district which they are to serve. [Applause.] Can any man on this floor give a valid reason why the people of a Federal circuit are not as competent to elect their judges as they are to elect the judges of their supreme courts, their circuit and other courts? If they are liable, as has been intimated, to elect Republicans, they ought to have Republicans. A majority of the people ought to have what they want in this country, it does not make any difference what their politics is. What do these Federal judges do? Is there a circuit court in any of the States where the judge does not do as much if not more work annually than any one of these Federal judges do? What is the expense? He has no office to keep up. He has a fixed salary for life, and when he retires he still feeds at the Public Treasury, and the taxpayers foot the bill. It is unfair and it is unjust to the American people. I would favor a law that would make public the recommendation and the sources from which these recommendations come-the controlling influences behind them. I mean no reflection by this, but I do think it fair to the people that they be informed by whose indorsements appointments are made.

Who are you getting upon the Federal bench? Upon what meat have these men fed that they are superior to other men? They come from the common walks of life. But usually you find the appointment coming from some great interest by which they have been employed and which recommends them and urges their appointment; too often the case, I fear, and much to the injury of the administration of justice. If any of them feel that they can not live upon their salaries, they can retire. There is no law which prevents them from retiring under such circumstances or any other. Others behind them can be appointed to fill the positions, with as much credit, doubtless, as they have done. If you will take the circuit judge in your State and the Federal judge in your district, you will find that there is not a circuit in that district where as a rule the judge of the State court does not try more cases and performs more service than the Federal judge in that circuit. And in 9 cases out of 10 he is as good, if not a better, lawyer. He knows better the wants of the people and comes in closer contact with them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

I ask unanimous consent for one minute more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. And he doubtless is as well read, if not better, in the law, as competent to transact business and does it as satisfactorily, and in 9 cases out of 10 less arbitrarily, than does the judge upon the Federal bench, as every practicing lawyer knows. The proposition for which I am contending here to-day will come sooner or later, because the people are aroused on this issue and will sooner or later secure its adoption. No appointing power can afford to deny the public this information, and it is no reflection on such power for the public to require it. By giving it to the public it will avoid much criticism of the courts, preserve their integrity, and enlarge their influence with the public. It is just, fair, and highly proper that such information should be made public, in the interest of justice and a pure public sentiment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I opposed this amendment when it was before the House a year ago. I am opposed to it now, though I am free to say that if it were not for the constitutional provision I would vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] to reduce the salary, but can not vote for the amendment of Mr. Mann to increase it. And yet I believe every public servant ought to have pay commensurate with the work he performs. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly patent that the amendment offered by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and I think the amendment to the amendment, will, neither of It is now 3 o'clock. This committee is still on them, prevail. call, and I believe I will test the sense of this committee upon a motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. I submit that motion, and want to make a remark about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Amend, on page 1, by striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I say again—because there are more Members in the House now present than there were when I had the honor of addressing the House for a few minutes a while ago—this bill, covering two pages and a half of language, does just two things: It amends the law which went into force on the 1st day of January, not yet a month ago, by going to the seventh circuit, composed of the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and decreasing one circuit judge, making three instead of four; one circuit judge having deceased and the place not yet having been filled.

Now, under that law it is perfectly competent for the President to nominate, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, somebody from Wisconsin or somebody from Indiana or somebody from Illinois, outside that great and growing city of Chicago. In this condition this bill is reported to create one more district judge, they already having two in the northern district of Illinois, and making it three, and to make one less circuit judge. If this legislation is enacted, the judge will come from the northern district, from the city of Chicago. There are already two from the city of Chicago. That would make three. Now, my colleague [Mr. Mann] says, and says truly, that the circuit judge under the new law is required to do the nisi prius duty the same as the district judge, so that there is no point, from the standpoint of utility, in changing this law. It had better read, "A bill to enable the President to appoint an additional district judge from the city of Chicago," in lieu of his power to appoint a circuit judge anywhere from among the three States mentioned.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gen-theman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman think that the President could find a first-rate lawyer who would be willing to serve at the present salary outside of the city of Chicago?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I fancy there are many good lawyers out there in that circuit, and, perchance, as good as anywhere in the United States, that would be quite willing to accept this place. It is a place of high honor and of high responsibility.

Now, with the greatest respect to everybody, to my colleague Mr. Mann, to my colleague Mr. Evans, and to the Committee on the Judiciary, who have reported this bill, it seems to me that this motion which I have submitted, to strike out the enacting clause and dispose of this bill, should be agreed to.

Mr. LAFFERTY and Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania rose. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAF-FERTY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, during this discussion I consider it an opportune time to call to the attention of Congress and of the country one of the most important reforms that could possibly be adopted by the people. I refer to the direct election of Federal judges. The present provision of the Constitution on this question reads as follows:

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman taking his five minutes by unanimous consent, but my point of order is founded upon the following decision, found in the Manual at page 419:

The motion-

To strike out the enacting clause-is debatable as to the merits of the bill, but may not go beyond its

It does seem to me that the committee ought to be brought to vote upon this matter, and therefore I make the point of order; but not to appear invidious I will ask unanimous consent, if the point of order is sustained, that the gentleman from Oregon may address the committee for five minutes,

Mr. LAFFERTY. I am quite willing to have the Chairman rule on the point of order without further argument.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order? Mr. CANNON. At page 419, about the middle of the page of the Digest, if the Chair will turn to it, in the precedents under the motion to strike out the enacting clause of a bill, the Chair will find:

The motion is debatable as to the merits of the bill, but may not go beyond its provisions.

The purpose of that is to bring it to a vote. Now, the gentleman is proceeding to address the House, as I understand it, upon the recall of judges, or rather upon the direct election of judges.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Upon the election of judges. I may get to the recall a little bit later, if I am permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that the debate is not upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. The effect of the gentleman's point of order, if sustained, would be to take the gentleman from Oregon off

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but I have given notice that I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, and I will ask unanimous consent that he have his five minutes after this point of order is disposed of.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Then I ask that I may be permitted to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois is that after the motion is made to strike out the enacting clause, if a Member does not discuss the merits of the bill he is not in order under the rule?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. That is my point—that he is not discussing the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Does the gentleman from Illinois now ask unanimous con-

Mr. CANNON. I now ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon may be permitted to address the committee for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Can-NON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon be permitted to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, adverting again to the section of the Constitution which now obtains, I desire to say that I shall introduce in the House to-day the following joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment, substituting for the section which I read a while ago a section making all Federal judges elective:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States making the Federal judiciary elective and subject to recall.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of section 1 of Article III of the Constitution of the United States the following section be proposed as an amendment to said Constitution, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

ARTICLE III.

ARTICLE III.

Section 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices for a term of 12 years each, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. Successors to all judges now in office, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall be elected at the first general election at which presidential electors shall be chosen after the adoption of this amendment: Provided, That the Congress may by law prescribe that successors to only one-third of the membership of the Supreme Court shall be elected every four years until successors to the entire membership of said court shall be elected. The terms of all judges now in office, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall expire and terminate on the first Monday in January following the election of their successors. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint judges, either of the supreme or inferior courts, to fill temporary vacancies. All judges both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall be subject to recall at any general election at which presidential electors shall be chosen. Congress shall enact appropriate laws for carrying the provisions of this section into effect.

RECALL NOT INSISTED UPON.

RECALL NOT INSISTED UPON.

It will be observed that the proposed amendment also makes the Federal judges subject to the recall at any election at which presidential electors shall be chosen. That means that no judge could be subjected to recall, or rather to reelection, which is the real meaning of the recall, until he has served four years. I desire it distinctly understood, however, that I do not insist upon the recall feature of this amendment being left in the resolution. If this Congress is willing to submit this amendment to the States for ratification, with the recall feature stricken out, I shall be glad to consent to that amendment to the resolution. I doubt if a majority of the people of the country desire to adopt the recall, as applied to Federal judges, or as applied to any Federal officers.

But I do believe that a great majority of the people of this country are in favor of making the Federal judges elective and fixing their terms at 12 years. There is every reason why they should favor this amendment that exists in favor of the direct election of United States Senators.

Personally, I am heartily in favor of the direct election of Federal judges. The administration of the law is just as important to the welfare of the country as the enactment of the law.

SELF-GOVERNING NATION SHOULD ELECT JUDGES.

At the present time Federal judges are not responsive in any way to the wishes or consent of the governed. These life judges may with absolute impunity disregard the wishes or consent of the millions of human beings whose destinies they control. The judges can be entirely honest, as I know they are, and still be completely out of accord with the heart throbs of a great Nation that is supposed to be self-governing. This is not as it should be. The people should have the right to elect judges who are in sympathy with the progress of the country.

There be those who say, "No; it is best to have judges who are entirely removed from and independent of the popular will."

If this be true, it must be owned that we are incapable of selfgovernment and that we must have a governing power over us whose wisdom is superior to the combined wisdom of the people as expressed at the ballot box.

The defects in the present Federal judicial system are manifold. The Federal judiciary has appropriated unto itself powers that the Constitution never contemplated it should have. For example, it was four times proposed in the Constitutional Convention that the Supreme Court should be given the power to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional and void, and each time the framers of the Constitution voted that proposition down. The States would never have ratified the original Constitution had it given such autocratic powers to the Supreme Court. No supreme court in any other country on earth exercises such

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to oppose the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon]. If it had been submitted earlier in these proceedings, I would probably have very willingly voted for its adoption. But inasmuch as it succeeds the offering of the amendment by my colleague, Mr. Mann, and inasmuch as the adoption of this amendment to strike out the enacting clause would destroy the effect of the amendment offered by Mr. MANN,

Now, the main question before this committee at this time relates, as I understand it, to the raising of the salary of these judges from $6,000 to $7,000 a year. I say without any hesitation that if there is any set of men engaged in the discharge of the public service in this country who are inadequately paid it is the Federal judges. It may be easy for some gentlemen to secure places in the Congress of the United States and easy to attain distinction in other walks of life, but the bench is one place which men can not aspire to or attain without great difficulty. The apprenticeship they must serve, through years of toil and study, is not to be compared, I believe, with that in any other branch of the public service. They must not only, as a rule, spend time in colleges and universities, but after they are admitted to the bar they must by their efforts and ability attain some degree of distinction in the community before the President of the United States can be induced to recognize them by appointment or confer upon them so great an honor.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think the appointment confers great enough honor to pay them for all the time the judges have spent in preparation?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not, any more than I regard the conferring of the honor of membership in this House being sufficient to compensate him for his services while he remains here.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the conditions that obtained years ago and exist now are wholly different. Gentlemen on that side and one on this side of the House have suggested that they will soon adopt a method by which the selection of these judges shall be changed. As far as gentlemen on that side are concerned, I submit that the men who wrote the provision that made it incumbent upon the President of the United States to select judges had quite as much wisdom as the statesmen of the present day. Under that system we have proceeded for 130 years. With what result? Some gentlemen are inclined to ask questions that indirectly cast suspicion on the Federal judiciary and the President who is called upon to appoint them. If there is any grave injustice being practiced in this country to-day—and I abhor its suggestion in the Congress of the United States—it is the unjust criticism of Federal judges, and the unjust criticism of men who are called upon from time to time to make these appointments which are so important to the American people.

We have been asked here within the last 20 minutes "who inspires these appointments. I would like to have some publicity on the subject." No man's mouth is closed in this Congress. If publicity is desired, and any man here or elsewhere has knowledge of improper influences being exercised in bringing about the appointment of Federal judges, it is his duty, and certainly it is his right, to make known that knowledge to the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object, but I give notice now that I shall hereafter object to any extension of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the duties that existed years ago, there never was a time when the duties of Federal judges were increasing as rapidly as they are now, to a very large extent owing to the activities of men on both sides of this House. The powers and the activities of the States are constantly being devoured—a word used very properly and learnedly by my friend, Mr. McCall, in a recent debate, while the estimates of the Foderal Covernment are -while the activities of the Federal Government are increasing every hour; and as these activities increase the duties and responsibilities of Federal judges increase. So far as the criticisms that have been uttered from time to time are concerned, they have been unjust.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman actually believe that an increase of salary will get better judges?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I believe that the increase of salaries will bring about a condition more in harmony with justice than that which exists to-day.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Would the gentleman have any objection to making public the indorsements of an applicant for a judgeship?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Personally I would have no objection whatever, but what I insist upon is this, that men having the right to make known any improper conduct or any improper influence that may have been exercised at any time or place, instead of not making it known, as they do, by dealing in innuendos and insinuations that have the ultimate result of casting aspersions upon the judiciary and bringing the law into contempt, shall frankly state what that misconduct or improper influence is.

If there is any body of men in this world that ought to inspire confidence in the law and bring about an added degree of confidence in the men who administer it, it is the Congress of the United States, whose duty it is to make the laws. [Applause.] And let me say, in passing, that from the time of the founding of this Government until now there never was a man called upon to exercise this particular duty of appointing special Federal judges who has exercised it with greater caution, greater care, or more sincerity of purpose than the present Chief Executive of this Republic, William H. Taft. [Applause on the Republican side.] This administration, nor no administration that I know of in my memory or within my reading knowledge, has ever been called upon to defend itself in this particular matter; and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that at some time these aspersions will end and that all men who may be called from time to time to the Capital of their country to make laws to govern the Nation will exercise their right and perform their duty by not only enacting laws wisely, but of inspiring confidence in the men who are called upon to administer them as we would have others inspire confidence in us. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I desire to say, so that the House may fully understand this measure, that this bill recognizes the fact that there are four circuit judges in the Chicago circuit, and there are but two district judges in the Chicago district. Judge Grosscup, one of the circuit judges, has resigned, and his successor has not been appointed. The circuit judges will constitute the circuit court of appeals. There is no necessity there for more than three judges to sit on the circuit court of appeals. There are in this Chicago district but two district judges, and the district judges now, as we all know, discharge all of the duties formerly incumbent upon the circuit judges, because the circuit courts have been abolished, other than the circuit court of appeals. The necessity there is for another district judge, and the public can well dispense with the services of one of the four circuit judges. The proposition, therefore, is simply to authorize the appointment of a district judge in lieu of this fourth circuit judge, who is unnecessary. The bill is in the interest of economy. Under this bill the district judge will get $6,000, whereas, if a successor to Judge Grosscup be appointed, he will get $7,000 a year. That is the effect of the bill and the purpose of it, and it ought to pass.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly. Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that there are two district judges for Chicago.

Mr. CLAYTON. Two for that district. Mr. CANNON. And four for the district; but there are two for Wisconsin, and there are two others in Illinois-the eastern and southern judges.

Mr. CLAYTON. Two other what?
Mr. CANNON. District judges. There is also one in Indiana.
Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. I feared the gentleman might mislead the House by saying there was nothing in this whole question except

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not intend to do that. If my remarks were subject to that criticism, I am very much obliged to the gentleman for making the suggestion. The whole proposition, Mr. Chairman, is this: To dispense with one circuit court judge, who is unnecessary, and, in dispensing with him, to have a district judge, who is necessary. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments thereto be closed. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate upon this paragraph and all pending amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 25, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] by substituting five thousand for seven thousand.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending that has not yet been voted upon. The vote now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] increasing the salary of district judges from $6,000 to $7,000.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move in line 7, page 2, to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 2, line 7, by striking out the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one."

Mr. CANNON. So that it will read-

The CLERK (reading): One additional district judge.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a word, and a word only. Under the law now there are two district judges in Chicago. This will increase it by one additional, so that there will be three. It brings up the same question I asked a moment ago. That is all there is in the bill, that—

Mr. MANN. And the decrease.
Mr. CANNON. Yes; the circuit judge would come later.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he is proceeding by unanimous consent. As the Chair understood the motion made, it was that all debate be closed on this section and amendments thereto.

Mr. CANNON. Pending amendments, I believe. I do not desire to debate it further, but to just give notice that if this amendment is to stay in it will leave the law as it is and will be followed by another amendment to strike out the word "three," section 118, in line 6, and insert "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," on page 2, in line 7.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the "noes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON), there were-aver 32, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section as follows:
"That hereafter before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or Supreme Court judge he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant."

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that is that the public may know exactly who is indorsing an applicant.
Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment

ent. [Applause.] Mr. CULLOP. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Division!

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it-

Mr. CANNON. A division was demanded, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. No one was on his feet

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois demanded a division.

Mr. CANNON. I did not, but I will.

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see anyone on his feet.

The understanding of the rule is that a gentleman desiring. recognition shall arise and address the Chair. The Chair did not hear any such request and did not see anyone on his feet-

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order! The CHAIRMAN. Therefore the Chair declined to recognize-

Mr. OLMSTED. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman. Some-body did cry "Division." Whether he rose or not I do not know, but evidently the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who intended to move for a division, was misled by that. The gentleman from Illinois was on his feet, because we all saw him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois distinctly stated he did not call for a division.

Mr. CANNON. I did not, because somebody else called for a division.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he rose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will ask the Chair if he looked in my direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he did, and did not see the gentleman. I heard a voice over in that direction, but saw no one standing.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON] will bear out my statement that I demanded a division.

Mr. LITTLETON. I was sitting by the side of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. When the vote was anman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. When the vote was announced, he cried "Division," and started to rise from his desk. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] was standing on his feet, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was misled by hearing the demand for a division by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be amended so as to read:

the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of $7,000 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit."

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of finishing the remarks I had almost concluded a while ago when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] objected. I desire to make it clear that I would not add anything to what has been said here touching the integrity of the Federal judiciary. I believe that the Federal judiciary of this country is of the highest character, composed of the very best men of our legal profession; that they are appointed by the President from the loftiest motives and for the best interests of our common country. But I do believe, and I will say here, that if it were submitted to a vote of the people of the United States it would be decided that our Federal judges ought to be elected by the people for a term of 12 years each instead of being continued as life judges, with a practical impossibility of removal. It is the system I complain against and not the fact that any one of our Federal judges now is dishonest. The system we have, however, at the present time does lead toward abuses, or, rather, I should say, toward the administration of the law in a manner that is not to the best interests of the country. No supreme court of any other civilized country on earth has the power of holding an act of its legislature unconstitutional.

The Federal district judges have also shown a marked tendency toward the exercise of autocratic power, as every lawyer in this country knows. These judges are simply human beings, and they are only following the bent of human nature to exercise such powers when they are given to them. It is the life tenure and the practical impossibility of removal that causes the trouble. The people are to blame if they do not change the system and make these judges elective. This Congress should give to the States an opportunity to adopt an amendment to the Constitution making these judges elective.

I want to give one illustration of the work of the Federal courts. Five years ago I filed suits for settlers in the Federal court at Portland, Oreg., against the Oregon & California Railroad Co., to compel it to sell granted lands to actual settlers in quantities not greater than 160 acres to any one settler and at prices not to exceed $2.50 per acre, as required by a plain act of Congress. Certain laymen said to me that the cases would be in court for 20 years. I replied to them they did not know what they were talking about, that they were simply prejudiced against the Federal courts; and I assured them would have the test cases in the Supreme Court of the United States inside of three years. I had practiced law for eight years in the State courts. I had got justice there. I had never been balked in the trial of a lawsuit. I did not expect in these Federal cases to let any rule day go by without being there and taking the necessary orders to expedite these suits. But when I filed those complaints five years ago an assistant to the Attorney General showed up on the scene. He went into the chambers of the Federal judge, as he told me himself, and he told that Federal judge that he would regard it as unfortunate if any decision should be rendered in my cases in advance of the filing of a Government complaint which he promised would be filed soon thereafter.

In this railroad land-grant case the judge refused for more a year to take any action whatever on my complaints for the settlers, awaiting the filing of a suit by the Attorney General. Then the court ordered the complaints consolidated. Later demurrers to the complaints were argued and the court gave four months for filing briefs, which was all right. the Attorney General took 17 months to file his brief and the judge willingly acquiesced in this delay. Five years have now gone by and the railroad land-grant case has not yet been tried in the court of first instance. It will probably be detried in the court of first instance. cided in about a year now. It will then be appealed to the Court of Appeals at San Francisco, and when it shall finally be decided there it will be appealed to the Supreme Court at Washington. It is now manifest that the laymen who predicted in a derisive way, as I thought, that the case would be permitted to drag along for 20 years were nearer right than I was, because I confidently expected to get the case to the Supreme Court in three years. Where is the man who will have the credulity to believe that this case would be dragging along at this snail-like pace if Federal judges were accountable to the people for their elections? I shall continue to fight this case and the conditions that have made it possible for it to be held up in this manner so long as I remain a Member of Congress. There are doubtless thousands of other cases in which the people of this Union are equally interested that are being handled in the same manner.

CHIEF JUSTICE CLARK'S ADDRESS.

I am pleased to incorporate, as a part of my speech, the most able address on the Constitution that I have ever read. The author is the chief justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. This eminent jurist favors the direct election of Federal judges, and he gives reasons why this must be done if we are to be in practice, what we claim to be in theory, a self-governing Nation. The address, from which I have omitted a few portions, follows, and I bespeak for it most careful consideration:

SOME DEFECTS IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

(An address to the law department of the University of Pennsylvania, Apr. 27, 1906, by Walter Clark, chief justice of North Carolina.)

In Philadelphia on July 4, 1776, was proclaimed "Liberty throughout all the land and to all the inhabitants thereof." And here, too, 11 years later, was another notable event, when on September 17, 1787, was issued to the world the Constitution of these United States. It is of the latter—"its defects and the necessity for its revision"—that I shall speak to you to-night.

Just here it is well to call to mind the radical difference between these two conventions. That which met in 1776 was frankly democratic. Success in its great and perilous undertaking was only possible with the support of the people. The great Declaration was an appeal to the masses. It declared that all men were created equal and endowed with certain inalienable rights-among them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to secure which rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that when government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and institute a new government in such form as shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Never was the right of revolution more clearly as-serted or that government existed for the sole benefit of the people, who were declared to be equal and endowed with the right to change their government at will when it did not subserve their welfare or obey their wishes. Not a word about property. Everything was about the people. The man was more than the dollar then. And the convention was in earnest. Every member signed the Declaration, which was unanimously voted. As Dr. Franklin pertinently observed, it behooved them to hang together or they would hang separately.

The convention which met in 1787 was as reactionary as the other had been revolutionary and democratic. It had its beginning in commercial negotiations between the States. Wearied with a long war, enthusiasm for liberty somewhat relaxed by the pressing need to earn the comforts and necessities of life, whose stores had been diminished and oppressed by the ban upon prosperity caused by the uncertainties and impotence of the existing government of the Confederacy, the convention of 1787 came together. Ignoring the maxim that government should exist only by the consent of the governed, it sat with closed doors, that no breath of the popular will should affect their decisions. To free the members from all responsibility members were prohibited to make copies of any resolution or to correspond with constituents or others about matters pending before the convention. Any record of yeas and nays was forbidden, but one was kept without the knowledge of the convention. The journal was kept secret, a vote to destroy it fortunately failed, and Mr. Madison's copy was published only after the lapse of 49 years, when every member had passed beyond human accountability. Only 12 States were ever represented and one of these withdrew before the final result was reached. Of its 65 members, only 55 ever attended, and, so far from being unanimous, only 39 signed the Constitution, and some actively opposed its ratification by their own States.

That the Constitution thus framed was reactionary was a matter of course. There was, as we know, some talk of a royal government, with Frederick, Duke of York, second son of George the Third, as King. Hamilton, whose subsequent great services as Secretary of the Treasury have crowned him with a halo, and whose tragic death has obliterated the memory of his faults, declared himself in favor of the English form of government, with its hereditary Executive and its House of Lords, which he denominated "a most noble institution." Failing in that, he advocated an Executive elected by Congress for life, Senators and judges for life, and governors of States to be appointed by the President. Of these he secured, as it has proved, the most important, from his standpoint, the creation of judges The convention was aware that a Constitution on Hamilton's lines could not secure ratification by the several States. But the Constitution adopted was made as undemocratic as possible, and was very far from responding to the condition, laid down in the Declaration of 1776, that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the gov-Hamilton, in a speech to the convention, stated that the members were agreed that "we need to be rescued from the democracy." They were rescued. Thomas Jefferson unfortunately was absent as our minister to France and took no part in the convention, though we owe largely to him the compromise by which the first 10 amendments were agreed to be adopted in exchange for ratification by several States which otherwise would have been withheld.

In truth, the consent of the governed was not to be asked. In the new government the will of the people was not to control and was little to be consulted. Of the three great departments of the Government—legislative, executive, and judiciary—the people were intrusted with the election only of the House of Representatives, to wit, only one-sixth of the Government, even to the House had been made and little and the control of the control of the Government, even if that House had been made equal in authority and power with the Senate, which was very far from being the case. Declaration of 1776 was concerned with the rights of man. Convention of 1787 entirely ignored them. There was no Bill of Rights and the guaranties of the great rights of freedom of speech and of the press, freedom of religion, liberty of the people to assemble, and right of petition, the right to bear arms, exemption from soldiers being quartered upon the people, ex-emption from general warrants, the right of trial by jury and a grand jury, protection of the law of the land, and protection from seizure of private property for other than public use, and then only upon just compensation; the prohibition of excessive bail or cruel and unusual punishment, and the reservation to the people and the States of all rights not granted by the Constitution—all these matters of the utmost importance to the rights of the people were omitted, and were inserted by the first 10 amendments only because it become imperatively necessary to give assurances that such amendments would be adopted in order to secure the ratification of the Constitution by the several States.

The Constitution was so far from being deemed satisfactory even to the people and in the circumstances of the time for which it was framed, that, as already stated, only 11 States voted for its adoption by the convention, and only 39 members out of 55 attending signed it, some members subsequently opposing its ratification. Its ratification by the convention in the several States was carried with the greatest difficulty, and in no State was it submitted to a vote of the people themselves. Massachusetts ratified only after a close vote and with a de-mand for amendments; South Carolina and New Hampshire also demanded amendments, as also did Virginia and New York, both of which voted ratification by the narrowest majorities and reserving to themselves the right to withdraw; and two States (North Carolina and Rhode Island) rejected the Constitution, and subsequently ratified only after Washington had been elected and inaugurated—matters in which they had thus no share.

George Washington was president of the convention, it is true, but as such was debarred from sharing in the debates. His services, great as they were, had been military, not civil, and he left no impress upon the instrument of union, so far as known. Yet it was admitted that but for his popularity and influence the Constitution would have failed of ratification by the several States, especially in Virginia. Indeed, but for his great influence the convention would have adjourned without putting its final hand to the Constitution, as it came very near Even his great influence would not have availed but for the overwhelming necessity for some form of government as a substitute for the rickety Articles of Confederation, which were utterly inefficient and whose longer retention threatened civil

An instrument so framed, adopted with such difficulty, and ratified after such efforts and by such narrow margins, could not have been a fair and full expression of the consent of the governed. The men that made it did not deem it perfect. Its friends agreed to sundry amendments, 10 in number, which were adopted by the first Congress that met. The assumption by the new Supreme Court of a power not contemplated, even by the framers of the Constitution, to drag a State before it as defendant in an action by a citizen of another State, caused the enactment of the eleventh amendment. The unfortunate method prescribed for the election of President nearly caused a civil war in 1801 and forced the adoption of the twelfth amendment, and three others were brought about as the result of the great Civil War. The Convention of 1787 recognized itself that the defects innate in the Constitution, and which would be developed by experience and the lapse of time, would require amendments, and that instrument prescribed two different methods by which amendments could be made.

Our Federal Constitution was adopted nearly a century and a quarter ago. In that time every State has radically revised its constitution and most of them several times. Indeed, the constitution of New York requires that the question of a constitutional convention shall be submitted to its people at least once every 20 years. The object is that the organic law shall keep abreast of the needs and wants of the people and shall represent the will and progress of to-day and shall not, as is the case with the Federal Constitution, be hampered by provisions deemed best by the divided counsels of a small handful of men in providing for the wants of the Government considerably more than 100 years ago. Had those men been gifted with divine foresight and created a Constitution fit for this day and its development, it would have been unsuited for the needs of the times in which it was fashioned.

When the Constitution was adopted, in 1787, it was intended for 3,000,000 of people, scattered along the Atlantic slope from for 3,000,000 of people, scattered along the Atlantic slope from Massachusetts to the southern boundary of Georgia. We are now trying to make it do duty for very nearly 100,000,000 of people. Then our population was mostly rural; for three years later, at the First Census, in 1790, we had but five towns in the whole Union which had as many as 6,500 inhabitants each, and only two others had over 4,000. Now we have the second largest city on the globe, with over 4,000,000 of inhabitants, and many that have passed the half-million mark, some of them of over a million population. Three years later, in 1790, we had 75 post offices with $37,000 annual post-office expenditures. 75 post offices, with $37,000 annual post-office expenditures. Now we have 75,000 post offices, 35,000 rural delivery routes, and a post-office appropriation of nearly $200,000,000.

During the first 10 years the total expenditures of the Federal Government, including payments on the Revolutionary debts, and including even the pensions, averaged $10,000,000 annually. Now the expenditures are 75 times as much. the Constitution was adopted Virginia was easily the first State in influence, population, and wealth, having one-fourth the population of the entire Union. North Carolina was third, and New York, which then stood fifth, now has double the population of the whole country at that date, and several other States have now a population greater than the original Union, whose very names were then unheard and over whose soil the savage and the buffalo roamed unmolested. Steamboats, railroads, gas, electricity (except as a toy in Franklin's hands), coal mines, petroleum, and a thousand other things which are a part of our lives to-day were undiscovered.

Corporations, which now control the country and its Government, were then so few that not till four years later, in 1791, was the first bank incorporated (in New York), and the charter for the second bank was only obtained by the subtlety of Aaron Burr, who concealed the banking privileges in an act incorporating a water company—and corporations have had an affinity for water ever since.

Had the Constitution been perfectly adapted to the needs and wishes of the people of that day, we would still have outgrown it. Time has revealed flaws in the original instrument, and it was, as might be expected, wholly without safeguards against that enormous growth of corporations, and even of individuals, in wealth and power, which has subverted the control of the Government.

The glaring defect in the Constitution was that it was not democratic. It gave, as already pointed out, to the people-to the governed-the selection of only one-sixth of the Government, to wit, one-half-by far the weaker half-of the legislative department. The other half, the Senate, was made elective at second hand by the State legislatures, and the Senators were given not only longer terms but greater power, for all presidential appointments and treaties were subjected to confirmation by the Senate.

The President was intended to be elected at a still further remove from the people by being chosen by electors, who, it was expected, would be selected by the State legislatures. The President thus was to be selected at third hand, as it were. In fact, down till after the memorable contest between Adams, Clay, Crawford, and Jackson, in 1824, in the majority of the States the presidential electors were chosen by the State legislatures, and they were so chosen by South Carolina till after the Civil War, and, in fact, by Colorado in 1876. The intention was that the electors should make independent choice, but public opinion forced the transfer of the choice of electors from the legislatures to the ballot box, and then made of them mere figureheads, with no power but to voice the will of the people, who thus captured the executive department. That department, with the House of Representatives, marks to-day the extent of the share of the people in this Government.

The judiciary were placed a step still further removed from the popular choice. The judges were to be selected at fourth hand by a President (intended to be selected at third hand) and subject to confirmation by a Senate chosen at second hand. And to make the judiciary absolutely impervious to any consideration of the "consent of the governed" they are appointed for life.

It will be seen at a glance that a Constitution so devised was intended not to express, but to suppress, or at least disregard, the wishes and the consent of the governed. It was admirably adapted for what has come to pass—the absolute domination of the Government by the "business interests," which, controlling vast amounts of capital and intent on more, can secure the election of Senators by the small constituencies, the legislatures which elect them, and can dictate the appointment of the judges; and if they fail in that the Senate, chosen under their auspices, can defeat the nomination. Should the President favor legislation and the House of Representatives pass the bill, the Senate, with its majority chosen by corporation in-fluences, can defeat it; and if, by any chance, it shall yield to the popular will and pass the bill, as was the case with the income tax, there remains the judiciary, who have assumed without any warrant, express or implied in the Constitution, the reward to declare any not propositivitional at their own will the power to declare any act unconstitutional at their own will and without responsibility to anyone.

The people's part in the Government in the choice of the House of Representatives, even when reenforced by the Executive, whose election they have captured, is an absolute nullity in the face of the Senate and the judiciary, in whose selection the people have no voice. This, therefore, is the Government of the United States-a government by Senate and judges-that is to say, frankly, by whatever power can control the selection of Senators and judges. What is that power? We know that it is not the American people.

Let us not be deceived by forms, but look at the substance. Government rests not upon forms, but upon a true reply to the question, "Where does the governing power reside?" The Roman legions bore to the last day of the Empire upon their standards the words, "The Senate and the Roman people," long centuries after the real power had passed from the curia and the comitia to the barracks of the Pretorian Guards, and when there was no will in Rome save that of their master. were still tribunes of the people and consuls and a senate and the title of a republic, but the real share of the people in the Roman Government was the donation to them of "bread and circuses" by their tyrants,
Years after the victor of Marengo had been crowned Emperor and the sword of Austerlitz had become the one power in France, the French coins and official documents still bore the inscription of "French Republic"—"République Française."

In England to-day there is a monarchy in form, but we know that in truth the real government of England is vested in a single House of Parliament, elected by the people, under a restricted suffrage; that the real executive is not the King, but the prime minister and his cabinet, practically elected by the House of Commons and holding office at the will of the majority in that House; that the King has not even the veto power, except nominally, since it has not been exercised in a single instance for more than 200 years; and that the sole function of the House of Lords-a club of rich men representing great vested interests-is in the exercise of a suspensive veto (of which the King has been deprived), which is exercised only till the Commons make up their mind the bill shall pass, when the House of Lords always gives way, as the condition upon which their continued existence rests. So in this country we retain the forms of a Republic. We still choose our President and the House of Representatives by the people; but the real power does not reside in them or in the people. It rests with those great "interests" which select the majority of the Senate and the judges.

This being the situation, the sole remedy possible is by amendment of the Constitution to make it democratic and place the selection of these preponderating bodies in the hands of the

First, the election of Senators should be given to the people. Even then consolidated wealth will secure some of the Senators; but it would not be able, as now, at all times to count with absolute certainty upon a majority of the Senate as its creatures. Five times has a bill proposing such amendment to the Constitution passed the House of Representatives by a practically unanimous vote, and each time it has been lost in the Senate; but never by a direct vote. It has always been disposed of by referring the bill to a committee which never reports it back, and never will. It is too much to expect that the great corporations which control the majority of the Senate will ever voluntarily transfer to the people their profitable and secure hold upon supreme power by permitting the passage of an amendment to elect Senators by the people. The only hope is in the alternative plan of amendment, authorized by the Constitution, to wit, the call of a constitutional convention upon the application of two-thirds of the States, to wit, 30 More than that number have already instructed in favor of an amendment to elect Senators by the people.

It may be recalled here that in the convention of 1787 Pennsylvania did vote for the election of Senators by the people. A strong argument used against this was that the farming interests, being the largest, would control the House and that the Senate could only be given to the commercial interests by making its Members elective by the legislatures-which was prophetic-though the deciding influence was the fear of the small States that if the Senate was elected by the people its membership would be based on population.

The most important of the changes necessary to place the Government of the Union in the hands of the people is to provide for the direct election of Federal judges. By far the most serious defect and danger in the Constitution is the appointment of judges for life, subject to confirmation by the Senate. It is a far more serious matter than it was when the convention of 1787 framed the Constitution. A proposition was made in the convention—as we now know from Mr. Madison's Journal—that the judges should pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress. This was defeated June 5, receiving the votes of only two States. It was renewed no less than three times, i. e., on June 6, July 21, and finally again for the fourth time on August 15; and though it had the powerful support of Mr. Madison and Mr. James Wilson, at no time did it receive the votes of more than three States. On this last occasion (August 15) Mr. Mercer thus summed up the thought of the convention: He disapproved of the doctrine that the judges, as expositors of the Constitution, should have authority to declare a law void. He thought laws ought to be well and cautiously made, and then to be incontrovertible.

Prior to the convention the courts of four States-New Jersey, Rhode Island, Virginia, and North Carolina—had expressed an opinion that they could hold acts of the legislature unconstitutional. This was a new doctrine never held before (nor in any other country since) and met with strong disapproval. In Rhode Island the movement to remove the offending judges was stopped only on a suggestion that they could be dropped" by the legislature at the annual election, which was The decisions of these four State courts were recent and well known to the convention. Mr. Madison and Mr. Wilson favored the new doctrine of the paramount judiciary, doubtless deeming it a safe check upon legislation, since it was to be operated only by lawyers. They attempted to get it into the Federal Constitution in its least objectionable shape, the judicial veto before final passage of an act, which would thus save time and besides would enable the legislature to avoid the objections raised. But even in this diluted form, and though four times presented by these two very able and influential members, this suggestion of a judicial veto at no time received the votes of more than one-fourth of the States.

The subsequent action of the Supreme Court in assuming the power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional was without a line in the Constitution to authorize it, either expressly or by implication. The Constitution recited carefully and fully the matters over which the courts should have jurisdiction, there is nothing, and after the above vote four times refusing jurisdiction there could be nothing, indicating any power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional and void.

Had the convention given such power to the courts, it certainly would not have left its exercise final and unreviewable. It gave the Congress power to override the veto of the President, though that veto was expressly given, thus showing that in the last analysis the will of the people, speaking through the legislative power, should govern. Had the convention supposed the courts would assume such power, it would certainly have given Congress some review over judicial action and certainly would not have placed the judges irretrievably beyond "the consent of the governed" and regardless of the popular will by making them appointive, and, further, clothing them with the undemorantic properties of toppus for life. cratic prerogative of tenure for life.

Such power does not exist in any other country, and never has. It is therefore not essential to our security. It is not conferred by the Constitution; but, on the contrary, the convention, as we have seen, after the fullest debate, four times, on four several days, refused by a decisive vote to confer such power. The judges not only have never exercised such power in England, where there is no written constitution, but they do not exercise it in France, Germany, Austria, Denmark, or in any other country which, like them, has a written constitution.

A more complete denial of popular control of this Government could not have been conceived than the placing of such ment could not have been conceived than the placing of such unreviewable power in the hands of men not elected by the people and holding office for life. The legal-tender act, the financial policy of the Government, was invalidated by one court and then validated by another, after a change in its personnel. Then the income tax, which had been held constitutional by the court for a hundred years, was again so held, and then by a sudden change of vote by one judge it was held unconthen by a sudden change of vote by one judge it was held unconstitutional, nullified, and set at naught, though it had passed by a nearly unanimous vote both Houses of Congress, containing many lawyers who were the equals, if not the superiors, of the vacillating judge, and had been approved by the President and voiced the will of the people. This was all negatived (without any warrant in the Constitution for the court to set aside an act of Congress) by the vote of one judge; and thus $100,000,000 and more of annual taxation was transferred from those most able to bear it and placed upon the backs of those who already carried more than their fair share of the burdens of government. Under an untrue assumption of authority given by 39 dead men one man nullified the action of Congress and the President and the will of 75,000,000 of living people, and in the 13 years since has taxed the property and labor of the country, by his sole vote, $1,300,000,000, which Congress, in compliance with the public will and relying on previous decisions of the court, had decreed should be paid out of the excessive incomes of the rich.

In England one-third of the revenue is derived from the superfluities of the very wealthy by the levy of a graduated income tax and a graduated inheritance tax, increasing the per cent with the size of the income. The same system is in force in all other civilized countries. In not one of them would the hereditary monarch venture to veto or declare null such a tax. In this country alone the people, speaking through their Congress and with the approval of their Executive, can not put in force a single measure of any nature whatever with assurance that it shall meet with the approval of the courts; and its failure to receive such approval is fatal, for, unlike the veto of the Executive, the unanimous vote of Congress (and the income tax came near receiving such vote) can not prevail against it. Of what avail shall it be if Congress shall conform to the popular demand and enact a "rate-regulation" bill and the President shall approve it if five lawyers, holding office for life and not elected by the people, shall see fit to destroy it, as they did the income-tax law? Is such a government a reasonable one, and can it be longer tolerated after 120 years of experience have demonstrated the capacity of the people for self-govern-If five lawyers can negative the will of 100,000,000 of men, then the art of government is reduced to the selection of those five lawyers.

A power without limit, except in the shifting views of the court, lies in the construction placed upon the fourteenth amendment, which passed, as everyone knows, solely to prevent discrimination against the colored race, has been construed by the court to confer upon it jurisdiction to hold any provision of any statute whatever "not due process of law." This draws the whole body of the reserved rights of the States into the maelstrom of the Federal courts, subject only to such forbearance as the Federal Supreme Court of the day or in any particular case may see fit to exercise. The limits between State and Federal jurisdiction depend upon the views of five men at any given time, and we have a government of men and not a government of laws, prescribed beforehand.

At first the court generously exempted from its veto the police power of the several States. But since then it has proceeded to set aside an act of the Legislature of New York restricting excessive hours of labor, which act had been sustained by the highest court in that great State. Thus labor can obtain no benefit from the growing humanity of the age, expressed by the popular will in any State, if such statute does not meet the views of five elderly lawyers, selected by influences naturally antagonistic to the laboring classes and whose training and daily associations certainly can not incline them in favor of restrictions upon the power of the employer.

The vast political power now asserted and exercised by the court to set aside public policies, after their full determination by Congress, can not safely be left in the hands of any body of men without supervision or control by any other authority whatever. If the President errs, his mandate expires in four years, and his party as well as himself is accountable to the people at the ballot box for his stewardship. If Members of Congress err, they, too, must account to their constituents. But the Federal judiciary hold for life, and though popular sentiment should change the entire personnel of the other two great departments of government, a whole generation must pass away before the people could get control of the judiciary, which possesses an irresponsible and unrestricted veto upon the action of the other departments—irresponsible because impeachment has become impossible, and if it were possible it could not be invoked as to erroneous decisions unless corruption were shown.

The control of the policy of government is thus not in the hands of the people, but in the power of a small body of men not chosen by the people and holding for life. In many cases which might be mentioned, had the court been elective, men not biased in favor of colossal wealth would have filled more seats upon the bench, and if there had been such decision as in the income-tax case, long ere this, under the tenure of a term of years, new incumbents would have been chosen, who, returning to the former line of decisions, would have upheld the right of Congress to control the financial policy of the Government in accordance with the will of the people of this day and age, and not according to the shifting views which the court has imputed to language used by the majority of the 55 men who met in Philadelphia in 1787.

It may be that this power in the courts, however illegally grasped originally, has been too long acquiesced in to be now questioned. If so, the only remedy which can be applied is to make the judges elective and for a term of years, for no people can permit its will to be denied and its destinies shaped by men it did not choose and over whose conduct it has no control, by reason of its having no power to change them and select other agents at the close of a fixed term.

It may be said that the Federal judges are now in office for life and it would be unjust to dispossess them. So it was with the State judges in each State when it changed from life judges to judges elected by the people; but that did not stay the hand of a much-needed reform.

It must be remembered that when our Federal Constitution was adopted, in 1787, in only one State was the governor elected by the people, and the judges in none, and that in most if not all the States the legislature, especially the senate branch, was chosen by a restricted suffrage. The schoolmaster was not abroad in the land, the masses were illiterate, and government by the people was a new experiment and property holders were afraid of it. The danger to property rights did not come then, as now, from the other direction—from the corporations and others holding vast accumulations of capital and by their power crushing or threatening to crush out all those owning modest estates.

In the State governments the conditions existing in 1787 have long since been changed. In all the States the governor and the members of both branches of the legislature have long since In all the 45 States save 4-Delaware, been made elective. been made elective. In all the 45 States save 4—Delaware, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island—the judges now hold for a term of years, and in three of these they are removable, as in England, upon a majority vote of the legislature, thus preserving a supervision of their conduct which is utterly lacking as to the Federal judiciary. In Rhode Island the judges were thus dropped summarily once when they had held an act of the legislature invalid. In 33 States the judges are elected by the people, in 5 States by the legislature, and in 7 States they are appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate. Even in England the judges hold office subject to removal upon the vote of a bare minority in Parliamentthough there the judges have never asserted any power to set aside an act of Parliament. There the will of the people, when expressed through their representatives in Parliament, is final. The King can not veto it, and no judge has ever dreamed he had power to set it aside.

There are those who believe and have asserted that corporate wealth can exert such influence that even if judges are not actually selected by the great corporations, no judge can take his seat upon the Federal bench if his nomination and confirmation are opposed by the allied plutocracy. It has never been charged that such judges are corruptly influenced. But the passage of a judge from the bar to the bench does not necessarily destroy his prejudices or his predilections. If they go upon the bench knowing that this potent influence, if not used for them, at least withheld its opposition to their appointment or their confirmation, and usually with a natural and perhaps onconscious bias from having spent their lives at the bar in advocacy of corporate claims, this will unconsciously, but effectively, be reflected in the decisions they make. Having attempted as lawyers to persuade courts to view debated questions from the standpoint of aggregated wealth, they often end by believing sincerely in the correctness of such views, and not unnaturally put them in force when in turn they themselves ascend the bench. This trend in Federal decisions has been pronounced. Then, too, incumbents of seats upon the Federal circuit and district bench can not be oblivious to the influence which procures promotion; and how fatal to confirmation by the plutocratic majority in the Senate will be the expression of any judicial views not in accordance with the "safe, sane, and sound" predominance of wealth.

As far back as 1820 Mr. Jefferson had discovered the, "sapping and mining," as he termed it, of the life-tenure, appointive Federal judiciary, owing no gratitude to the people for their appointment and fearing no inconvenience from their conduct, however arbitrary, in the discharge of such office. In short, they possess the autocratic power of absolute irresponsibility. "Step by step, one goes very far," says the French proverb. This is true of the Federal judiciary. Compare their jurisdiction in 1801, when Marshall ascended the bench, and their jurisdiction in 1906. The Constitution has been remade and rewritten by the judicial glosses put upon it. Had it been understood in 1787 to mean what it is construed to mean to-day, it is safe to say not a single State would have ratified it.

As was said by a great lawyer lately deceased, Judge Seymour D. Thompson, in 1891 (25 Am. Law Review, 288): "If the proposition to make the Federal judiciary elective instead of appointive is once seriously discussed before the people, nothing can stay the growth of that sentiment, and it is almost certain that every session of the Federal Supreme Court will furnish material to stimulate that growth."

Great aggregations of wealth know their own interests, and it is very certain that there is no reform and no constitutional amendment that they will oppose more bitterly than this. What, then, is the interest of all others in regard to it?

For my part, I believe in popular government. The remedy for the halting, halfway popular government which we have is more power to the people. When some one observed to Mr. Gladstone that the "people are not always right," he replied, "No; but they are rarely wrong." When they are wrong their intelligence and their interests combine to make them correct the wrong. But when rulers, whether kings or life judges, or great corporations, commit an error against the interests of the masses, there is no such certainty of correction.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, favorably to the House, and recommend that the bill as amended be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] moves that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rise and report the bill, with sundry amendments thereto, to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sisson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17595) to amend section 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that a separate vote be had on each of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state which ones

I think there are only two amendments. Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first one. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, after the word "additional," insert the word "district."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, as a new section, the following:

"That hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge, he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment.

The question was taken.

Pending the announcement of the result-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and thirtyone gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "Yea," and those opposed will answer "Nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 85, answered "present" 12, not voting 143, as follows:

A. bill (S. 4841) for the relief of Dr. W. S. Hosack (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

ANTHONY HIGGINS AND JOHN M. THURSTON.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to pay Anthony Higgins and John M. Thurston for legal services rendered in the defense of Charles Swayne, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 196), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish to the Senate the names of the members and officers of the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, their age, what official positions, if any, they have previously held, and the salary they are receiving in their present position.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WORKS. Yesterday I offered resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Berkeley, Cal., and other bodies, which I see were referred to the Committee on Commerce. be glad to have that reference changed, for the reason that there is pending in the Committee on Military Affairs a bill to which those resolutions refer.

Without objection, the reference will be changed as requested by the Senator from California.

Is there further morning business? If there be none, morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as first in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has already been read in full, considered as in Committee of the Whole, and one amendment has been agreed to. Are there other amendments?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, is that the bill introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BACON. I ask that it go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. BACON. I want to state, in making that objection, that the matter came up a day or two ago, and it was then practically understood that it was going to be brought up on some occasion when there would be opportunity for its proper discussion. I think it is understood by the Senator from Delaware that he is going to call it up some day next week.

The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that bill go over.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.
Senate concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 4) instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that may be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over. The bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That bill should go over likewise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire whether or not the bill which has just been passed over should not now be transferred, under the circumstances, to the calendar under Rule IX? It can not come up under Rule VIII under the five-minute rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill has been made a special order for Tuesday next.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it should be taken from under Rule

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is perhaps right, that it might better be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX under the circumstances, as it has been made a special order for Tuesday next.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in. order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that bill go over.

was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that bill, together with Calendar No. 186 and No. 187, being Senate bills No. 4623 and No.

4624, all relating to pensions, be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills referred to by the Senator from North Dakota will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3160) to establish at Holeb, Me., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask that that bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

ARANSAS PASS LIGHT STATION.

The bill (S. 4251) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to purchase from the State of Texas certain land required for lighthouse purposes at the Aransas Pass Light Station, Tex., was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that bill go over.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.
The bill (8. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford was announced as next in order.
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Sycon] asked that I got cortain information regarding that bill SMOOT] asked that I get certain information regarding that bill. I therefore ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

ESTATE OF ELIZA B. HAUSE.

The bill (S. 1508) for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the personal representative of the estate of Eliza B. Hause, late of Philadelphia, Pa., $342.08, taxes erroneously collected from her estate under the war revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 176) requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France, touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that resolution go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.
The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

CHEYENNE RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 108) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill what changes it makes in the status with respect to North Dakota.

Mr. GAMBLE. This bill has no relation to lands in North Dakota. It covers merely lands in the State of South Dakota. The next bill upon the calendar, for the opening of surplus lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, affects lands in both States, and as this bill has taken considerable time in its consideration, and as the next bill on the calendar is of considerable length, I will ask that the next bill on the calendar go over, which will give the Senator from North Dakota an opportunity to examine its provisions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURPLUS LANDS IN STANDING ROCK RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. It may go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PONCA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the bill on the calendar under Rule VIII or Rule IX?

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is called on the regular order. Mr. CURTIS. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

DWIGHT MISSION SCHOOL, SALLISAW CREEK, OKLA.

The bill (S. 2848) authorizing the sale of certain lands to the Dwight Mission School, on Sallisaw Creek, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment on page 2, line 3, after the word "therefore," to strike out the words "not less than," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to convey to the Dwight Mission School, on Sallisaw Creek, Okla., 26 acres of land heretofore set aside in accordance with the provisions of section 24 of the Cherokee agreement approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., pp. 716-720), for the use of such school for missionary and educational purposes, and now being occupied and used by the said Dwight Mission School, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept in payment therefor $10 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The bill (S. 4179) to amend section 73 of chapter 5 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that section 75a is unnecessary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know that there is any necessity for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that it be stricken out.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is no objection to the amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. One page 2 strike out lines 4 and 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 17595. An act to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUPPORT OF BASTARDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13041) to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed as the conferees, on the part of the Senate, Mr. Dillingham, Mr. Cur-TIS, and Mr. POMERENE.

VERMONT JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1650) to amend section 110 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which were, on page 1, line 6, after "amended," to strike out the remainder of lines 6 and 7 and insert "so as to read as follows," and on page 2, line 6, after "Newport," to insert "Provided, because That guitable recovery and assembled the statement of the stateme That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Brattleboro free of expense to the Government of the United States until the public building provided for by act of Congress shall be erected."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RHODE ISLAND JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives. The bill (H. R. 2973) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is upon the calendar a bill identical in form and in purpose with this bill, being the bill (S. 4575) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, which is next in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Senate bill be indefinitely post-

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be indefinitely postponed. The Secretary will read the House bill.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides that section 104 of the act shall be amended to read as follows:

Sec. 104. The State of Rhode Island shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Rhode Island; terms of the district court shall be held at Providence on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRE LOSSES DURING BUBONIC PLAGUE IN HAWAII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next bill upon the calendar.

The bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as the next bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

C. PERSON'S SONS.

The bill (S. 4032) for the relief of C. Person's Sons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refund to Daniel H. Person, William Person, and Frank P. Person, a copartnership doing business under the name of C. Person's Sons, in Buffalo, N. Y., $458.83, being the amount of duties paid by that firm upon certain whisky imported from Canada to Buffalo on the 12th day of May, 1908, which whisky was thereafter exported from that port by the firm, the duties not having been refunded to them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OAKLEY RANDALL.

The bill (S. 1767) for the relief of Oakley Randall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Oakley Randall, of Worthington, W. Va., $160 for services rendered as a volunteer soldier in the Fourteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLANT INVESTMENT CO.

The bill (S. 3087) for the relief of the Plant Investment Co. of New York, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$27,110.50" and insert "$574," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Plant Investment Co. of New York N. Y., to reimburse said company for damages suffered by it from ill use and abuse of the steamship Florida in obeying and carrying out the orders of military officers of the United States in order to rescue and salve property of the United States then being in imminent danger of destruction and loss during the War with Spain, as found by the Court of Claims, the sum of $574, which shall be accepted by said company in full payment and satisfaction for any and every claim the said Plant Investment Co. may have against the United States because of such use of said vessel.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the bill is to be considered, I should like to have some explanation of the ground upon which the increase is based. Some new evidence must have been discovered.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator is evidently mistaken. It is a decrease from $27,110.50 to $574.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true. Why was the reduction made?

Mr. BRISTOW. Because the Committee on Claims did not think that the claim of $27,110.50 was a just one, and did think that $574 was the proper amount of the claim. The claim was based upon two grounds-one was that the damages alleged to have been incurred by the ship occurred while it was pulling a steamship off the bar at Ponce, P. R. The Government was paying a charge of $600 a day for the ship, and the committee did not think that the damage was one that could be assessed, and the Court of Claims found it was not a legal claim.

Mr. HEYBURN. What was the use? What constituted the ill use and abuse of the ship? Who was guilty of abusing it?

It was alleged that the ship was not strong Mr. BRISTOW. enough to pull off the other ship, and the engines were strained in some way. The committee did not think it was a legitimate claim, but allowed the claim of $574.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over. That is rather shadowy. Mr. BRISTOW.

If the Senator will allow me-

Mr. GALLINGER. The court allowed $574.

Mr. BRISTOW. The court allowed $574. I should like to have the Senator give me his attention.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will listen to every word. Mr. BRISTOW. The court allowed $574 for the loss of cer-Mr. BRISTOW. tain small vessels that were destroyed by the Cubans when our sailors left them along the Cuban coast. They were small boats sailors left them along the Cuban coast. They were small boats that accompanied the ship, and the Government was responsible for them because it did not return them after the charter had expired, and when it received them they were in good

The Court of Claims found that the Government, having lost the small boats which accompanied the ship and not having returned them, the company was entitled to recover, and that $574 was due. The damages that were alleged to have occurred to the ship were not allowed by the committee, and they were rejected by the Court of Claims. This money is simply to pay for the small boats, concerning which there is no question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask is it true that this particular item was disallowed by the Court of Claims?

Mr. BRISTOW. It was allowed by the Court of Claims, The Court of Claims found it to be due.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill simply provides for the payment of the sum found due by the Court of Claims?

Mr. BRISTOW. Of the sum found due by the Court of Claims

Mr. HEYBURN. That is all it is? Mr. BRISTOW. That is all it is. Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Idaho to withdraw his objection?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I withdraw my objection. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 11321) to authorize the Twin City and Lake Superior Railway Co: to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River between Chisago County, Minn., and Polk County, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 4151) to authorize the Minnesota & International Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Bemidji, in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF MINES AND FORESTRY SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 13570) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DIXON. I submit an amendment. On page 1, line 10, after the word "mines," I move to insert "and the Forestry Service of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. On page 1, line 3, I move to strike out "on and after the passage of this act," and on page 2, line 2, I move to strike out the words "its passage" and insert "the 1st day of January, 1912."

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, let the bill be read as it would read if the amendments were agreed to read if the amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as it would read thus amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," shall, in addition to the classes of persons therein designated, be held to apply to any artisan, laborer, or other employee engaged in any hazardous work under the Bureau of Mines and the Forestry Service: Provided, That this act shall not be held to embrace any case arising prior to the 1st day of January, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, in explanation of this amendment I will state that the Director of the Bureau of Mines, Dr. Holmes, this morning called my attention to the case of one of the employees of that bureau who was called from Tennessee to Cherry Valley, in Pennsylvania, about two weeks ago, since the 1st of January, and in the performance of his duty, entering a mine to investigate and assist after an accident, he lost his life. It applies to this case only, and the adoption of the amendment will simply avoid the passage of a special bill hereafter for the relief of the family of the man.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the case to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has called attention was also referred to me. While I have no objection to it, I had some doubt as to whether the enactment of a provision of that kind is entirely proper on a bill of this nature. It was thought, in the first place, when the bill was introduced in the other House, that there were a number of cases which might be brought up and perhaps create some future trouble or litigation if it was not confined to the date of the passage of the act. I am quite in sympathy with the case to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has called attention, but I am wondering if such a provision is customary in the enactment of a law. I confess that I am ignorant in reference to that matter. I would not want to do anything here that would endanger the act or destroy its

Mr. OLIVER. I see no reason why we can not provide for this case, which is the only one that has arisen. If we do not provide for it, we will have to pass a special bill. We might as well do it now as at a future time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. My amendment I hurriedly prepared, and it was adopted. I ask unanimous consent to change the word "and" to the word "or."
Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana, as modified by

The Secretary. On page 1, line 10, after the words "Bureau of Mines," insert the words "or the Forestry Service of the

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the whole of it be read now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled, and so forth, shall, in addition to the classes of persons therein designated, be held to apply to any artisan, laborer, or other employee engaged in any hazardous work under the Bureau of Mines or the Forestry Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Montana, as modified, is agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill, if he can do so from memory or by reference to the act, state those who come under the existing law.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend],

I think, is in charge of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The act of 1908 applies to men employed in arsenals, navy yards, and the construction of the Panama Canal. This particular bill was intended to make it apply to those engaged in mines and mining under that bureau, those who are principally engaged in rescue work and in instruction work under the law relating to the Bureau of Mines and I am not at all familiar with the Forestry Service. Therefore, I am not in a position to make any explanation. If there are risks and if their work is peculiarly hazardous of course, I can see no reason why they should not come under the provisions of the act. Of course the Senator from Georgia understands that the law provides for the payment of a year's salary in case of a permanent injury or in case of death, in the first instance the payment being made to the employee, and in the other it is in favor of the family of the deceased. It seems to me it is entirely proper to make the act include mines and mining, one of the most dangerous occupations that the Government has to deal with.

Mr. BACON. I am not antagonizing any feature of the bill; I am asking for information. This is the point that caused my inquiry. I understand the act of 1908 to apply to those my inquiry. I understand the act of 1908 to apply who are in the service of the Government. Does it not?

Mr. DIXON. Yes, sir; solely.

Mr. BACON. Do the amendments apply simply to those in the service of the Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They do, and only to those.

I spoke of mines and mining. Does it refer Mr BACON. to the bureau?

It refers to the Bureau of Mines and Mining. Mr. TOWNSEND. The Bureau of Mines and Mining.

Mr. BACON. That is the reason why I made the inquiry. I did not understand how the terms of the act could be made to apply to a person in private employment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are all Government employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana in what respect the employees of the Forestry Service are subjected to unusual hazards.

Mr. DIXON. I had just risen in my seat to make a statement in justice to the Senator. The amendment has already passed, but I think it is not wise legislation to pass matters of this kind unless we have an intelligent idea of what is intended.

In this morning's mail I had a long letter from the chief forester of the northwestern division calling my attention to half a dozen lamentable cases of death and blindness occurring in the ranger force during the great forest fires in the West a year ago last summer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, if the Senator will permit me, unquestionably thoses cases might well come under the provisions of the statute that it is proposed to amend, but I will ask the Senator if his amendment does not bring in the entire force of the Forestry Service, no matter what the circumstances are under which they may be hurt.

Mr. DIXON. No; it applies to men engaged in hazardous service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator say that?
Mr. DIXON. Yes; I follow the wording of the bill exactly, merely inserting the Forestry Service, when engaged in hazardous employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is understood, I have no objection. Mr. DIXON. Now, I want to say for the benefit of the Senate, I was in the very center of the great forest fires of the Northwest during that period, and there were over 75 men burned to death in a radius of 150 miles of the place where the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] and myself reside. In the forest ranger service during those fires, as I recall it, six or seven of the forest rangers in the discharge of their duty fighting fierce forest fires were burned to death. I know individually of three or four cases where the eyesight of those men was destroyed and they are blind for life. There is absolutely no remedy on earth at this time to relieve them in any way from their great affliction arising in actual service in extrahazardous occupation for the United States

I remember in particular an old man who lives at the southern end of Bitterroot Valley, who three years ago in the forest fires had his eyes completely burned out. His companions rescued him, and he is living there on the charity of his neighbors in the county. I tried in many ways to find if there was not something in some way under the present law whereby he could at least have some recompense, but I find that the door of justice is absolutely closed to him. I bring in a bill here for his relief, it goes to the Claims Committee, and Senators know it is impossible to get these individual bills considered and to get favorable action in the House and the Senate during a session of Congress.

This probably would not cover three cases in a year, except in times of great forest conflagrations. There might never be a case arising under it. But when those great crises occur in the administration of the Forestry Service and men take their lives in their hands and go into the mountains fighting fire, in the event of their death or disability, certainly this great Government would not refuse them the slight pittance of six months' pay. I understand the language of the bill to be one year's pay in case of death and six months' pay in the case of total disability.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I gave my attention to the reading of the amendment, but I should like to ask the Senator if his amendment covers those cases where people are called in from outside the Forestry Service or who volunteer to assist the Forestry Service in extinguishing fires?

Mr. DIXON. It says "or the Forestry Service of the United States." If a man was temporarily called in to help fight a fire and lost his life or lost his eyesight, I can see no reason why he should not receive six months' pay, the same as anybody else, if employed in the service temporarily. I think it ought to cover it, if it does not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I understood the amendment, I fear under the old law, with the amendment, it would cover only those who were regularly employed in the Forestry Service.

Mr. DIXON. If that is true, I would very much like to have the Senator from Wyoming, who is familiar with some of the conditions which I have just recited and who is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, rewrite the amendment and send it to the desk. I think, however, the amendment covers the

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana

South Dekota? yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. DIXON. I do.
Mr. CRAWFORD. The language used is "or other employee engaged in any hazardous work under the Bureau of Mines."
It does not say "regularly employed."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the question arises whether or not they are employees of the Forestry Service in the sense in which the original act intended.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should think it would be doubtful if we should go beyond the words "employee of the United States." I certainly would not want to make the payments to those who were not employees of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, if the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming should be incorporated in this bill, it would bring under its terms all citizens who sustain any injury because of fighting the fires to protect their property.

Mr DIXON. No; I do not so understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If they are in the forest reserves, it certainly would. Mr. DIXON. No; I do not understand that to be the purpose of it. I understand that in the great mountain forest conflagrations the regular force of rangers is not sufficient, and they go out and employ, say, 50 men for a week. If those men are killed during that week's service, or if they are burned, I see no reason why they should not be equitably included, but certainly not the ordinary man defending his own property. The Senator from Wyoming suggests, however, that we insert "either regularly or temporarily employed."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana

yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.
Mr. BRISTOW. I think we had better not endanger this bill by putting on it all kinds of amendments.

Mr. DIXON. I think the amendment covers the case.
Mr. BRISTOW. The amendment, I think, covers the case, and, if it does not, we will think up some amendment that will cover meritorious cases; but we do not want to broaden the bill so that it will take in everyone.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in entire sympathy with this bill, but I ask that it go over, so that Senators who know more about it than I do may perfect it.

Mr. DIXON. If the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is willing, I will say that it is only a matter of four words—"or the Forestry Service." It is the same wording contained as to the Bureau of Mines. I think it covers it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But in the Bureau of Mines nobody is employed except the regular employees of the Government, while in the Bureau of Forestry ten chances to one a man who gets hurt is not an employee of the Forestry Service, except temporarily for the hazardous work for which he is then engaged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, he is an employee, whether he is temporary or permanent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, I am willing to submit to the superior judgment of the desire of the Senator who offers the amendment, but it is evident that there is a question, and it is to be solved as against the rights of these men.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my suggestion that the bill go over, in deference to other Senators.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, was the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] adopted?
The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, I call attention to the fact that the bill as it will read now. Mr. DIXON. That can be

Mr. DIXON. That can be amended afterwards.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I am going to call attention to ought to be changed. The bill reads now:

That on and after the 1st day of January, 1912, the provisions of

And so forth, shall apply; and the proviso is:

That this act shall not be held to embrace any case arising prior to its passage.

The two things are contradictory.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The words "its passage" have been stricken out and the words "the 1st day of January, 1912," inserted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those words were put in the first part of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. The bill as amended reads: "That the provisions of the act," and so forth. The time that it shall take effect is in the proviso alone.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that perhaps would be well for the Secretary to read the bill in the form it now is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill be read again. I do not understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is not so much the bill that troubles me as the existing law to be amended by this bill. I am not right sure that the persons who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of this legislation would be benefited by it. It is a limitation on their existing rights rather than an enlargement of them. The existing law, under which these people would be placed, provides, after the words "is injured in the course of such employment," as follows:

Such employees shall be entitled to receive for one year thereafter, unless such employee, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be sooner able to resume work, the same pay as if he continued to be employed, such payment to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured, nor unless said injury shall continue for more than 15 days. All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

That is where he is injured. The other provision which refers to cases where the employee is killed is also a limitation upon his existing rights; it diminishes existing rights.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Shall in addition—

Mr. HEYBURN. But the most that could be granted-not recovered, but granted—under this proposed law would be one year's salary in certain cases. Then, as to widows and children, the provision is even more limited.

Now, let us see whether or not these people are brought under the limitations of this act. It appears munificent on its face, but I have in mind, and other Senators from that section of the country doubtless will recall, that many of these people are crippled for life and should receive a larger compensation than is expressed in existing law for such cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President. I would ask the Senator whether there is any difference in the hardship that an employee on the Isthmus of Panama sustains or an employee in the navy yard would sustain than there is in the case of the same injury with one of these people in the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; a very marked difference.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Wherein is it? If an employee loses his leg in a navy yard or an employee loses his leg in one of these mines, why is not the hardship the same?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not referring to mines; I am referring to those who are injured in connection with the extinguishment or control of fires. One man is working for his wages; the other man is working to protect the lives and property of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. One of them is merely a selfish service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are basing this relief upon the principle-

Mr. HEYBURN. Of compensation.
Mr. CRAWFORD. No; but on the ground that it is an employee of the Government in the line of his duty who is in-They are all employees of the Government; they are all injured in the line of duty; then why is there any difference in the one case from the other?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will develop that briefly.

include others than those in the employ of the Government, as that term is ordinarily used. It is not only the day and the hour of emergency that calls them out, but it is the instant. Some of the worst cases of injury occurred where men within almost the flash of an eye were thrown into a position of jeopardy that cost them either maimed limbs or the loss of life.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me there, as I understand, it was not the purpose or the intention of this bill in any sense to undertake to cover a case where some person in an emergency came in and worked a few hours for the Government. You can not settle a case like that by giving him or his family a year's compensation, because the term of his employment may have been only a half day. It seems to me we would utterly destroy this bill and its purposes if we should undertake by an amendment to the bill to reach a class of that kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the very question I am proposing.
Mr. CRAWFORD. They ought to be dealt with by legislation independent of this. It is not possible to amend this bill so as to deal with cases of that type.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am questioning the wisdom of attempting to bring a class of men under the provisions of this bill who have a larger measure of right. I am not speaking from the standpoint that these men are to be brought under the terms of this bill; I am suggesting just exactly the opposite. I am criticizing the wisdom of attempting to bring a man to whom the Government owes a larger compensation within the limited compensation provided for men injured in the ordinary course of personal or selfish employment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon], it simply brings within the scope of this bill regular employees in the service of the Forestry Bureau, as it has already brought in regular employees of the Government in the Bureau of Mines; and as the existing law covers the case of regular employees of the Government on the Isthmus of Panama or in the navy yards. It seems to me it would be unwise to undertake to go further than that so as to include temporary employees working under emergencies who are injured after two or three days' service. It would be impossible by amending this bill to reach such cases, as the whole theory of the bill is to give a year's wages, and those men would have no such basis as that upon which to make claim.

Mr. DIXON. Why not?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They would only be at work for two or three days in an emergency.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator is speaking along the lines that I have been advocating, and I appreciate his supplemental remarks. I want to get this on the proper basis if I can. If I oppose this measure, it is not because I do not think these men should be compensated and cared for by the Government, but it is because I think to bring them under the provisions of this bill would diminish their right and result in their receiving less consideration than they should receive. That is the reason why I am inclined to object. Let us see. There were others besides the regular employees of the Government participating in the extermination or control of these forest fires-there are hundreds of them-and they were probably subjected to more danger and injury than the Government employees. They went in there with the zeal of patriots to meet an emergency. The employees went in there like an organized force, going here and there. The men who went in there to fight with the energy of volunteers in the case of an emergency were the ones who received the most injury. I have here, and I am inclined to put them in the RECORD, some of these facts. I will state the purport of them.

Mr. President-Mr. SUTHERLAND.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just what does the Senator from Idaho mean by saying that this bill would diminish the rights of Mr. HEYBURN. Because they are entitled to more consideration at the hands of the Government than merely to receive one year's compensation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean a moral right or a legal right?

Mr. HEYBURN. Both; in some cases one and in some the other.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But they have no legal right at all. Mr. HEYBURN. I am not so sure about that. Let me present that feature of it in a few words. A combination is made between what they call the fire fighters of the State and the fire fighters of the Government for mutual aid and protection in preventing and extinguishing fires. It is a mixed responsi-The State employs some of these men at a compensation agreed upon; the Government employs others of them without regard to the character of the duties they are called upon to perform; but another class of men go in and contribute to the efforts of both the contracting parties, and whether they are not entitled to recover, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, is not so sure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator under what law could any man so injured recover from the Government of the United States?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President— Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will hear me, the Government of the United States can not be sued except by its

Mr. HEYBURN. I am perfectly aware of that; that is fundamental; but the parties who are cooperating with the Government may be sued, and the Government has made a contract with them that they will share the expense of the performance of the work as a whole. I am not here to speak for somebody's claim, but it is not entirely clear that there is not

Mr. GALLINGER (in his seat). Had we better not let the bill go over?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think I want to be stopped in the midst of a sentence to let a bill go over. That is a bad way to get me off the floor or to undertake to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator is going to invoke the five-minute rule on a bill of this kind, then it is a rule that either ought to be repealed or applied with some degree of thoughtful consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was not going to invoke the rule beyond suggesting that we try to treat the Senator with courtesy, and the Senator ought to reciprocate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will reciprocate, but it is not the proper thing to get two heads together and propose to take a bill out of consideration or to waive its consideration while I am discussing it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I said nothing to the Senator at all; I did not address him.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, anyone may invoke the fiveminute rule, but such matters as this ought not to come up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. And every Senator ought to observe the rule.

Mr. HEYBURN. Which-in bringing it up or after it is up?

Mr. GALLINGER. Either way. Mr. HEYBURN. You are likely to destroy the rights of a class of people under such a foolish rule as that. I am going to finish my statement in regard to this matter unless some Senator feels impelled by a sense of duty to invoke the fiveminute rule.

I say there is a cooperation between the private ownership in these lands and the Government of the United States as to the manner and expense of extinguishing fires, and there is possibly a liability on the part of the Government to pay its contributive share to the expenses incurred by the joint arrangement between them. I am speaking of the arrangement in my own State, and I know what it is. I have the official statement in regard to it.

Mr. President, we have agreed to adjourn over until next Monday, because presumably we have nothing to do, and yet we have not time to discuss a measure that involves the life and the prosperity or happiness and maintenance of these victims of the carelessness of the Government of the United States. because the fires out of which the loss grew were the result of the carelessness of the Government of the United States. was not a fire originating upon a private holding. The fires originated in the forests that were under the supervision of Government officials and presumably connected by telephone and every other modern convenience-and I understand now by automobile. They were presumably safe, and yet these people lost their lives or their limbs or were crippled for life, and a quibble is raised as to whether the Government should be held responsible. If we make an appropriation for a man whose hands are burned off or whose eyes are burned out of his head, it should be commensurate with the loss that that man suffered, and we should not attempt to place him within the limits of a pension law for men who are crippled, perhaps, in the performance of a selfish duty for their own benefit.

Mr. President, I am not content to see these men brought under this bill. It seems on its face as though it were a charitable measure in the interests of these people. It is not. is an attempt to put them within a class less than they are entitled to or less serviceable to them. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ALESSANDRO COMBA.

The bill (S. 4180) for the relief of Alessandro Comba was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Alessandro Comba $500, on account of injuries received while in the employ of the United States under the supervision and direction of the Isthmian Canal Commission, on the Isthmus of Panama.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment. ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOUGLAS B. THOMPSON.

The bill (S. 2601) for the relief of Douglas B. Thompson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to Douglas B. Thompson, late an employee in the service of the Isthmian Canal Commission, for the loss of a leg and consequent physical disability incident to said

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RAILROAD CO.

The bill (S. 1416) for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay the claim of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. arising out of underpayments for freight shipments by the War Department in 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. F. MARTZ AND GJERLUF HANSON.

The bill (S. 2453) for the relief of Benjamin F. Martz was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the homestead entry of Gjerluf Hanson on farm unit "A," on the Bellefourche reclamation project, South Dakota, under the act of June 17, 1902, for the southeast quater of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 8 north, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian, is hereby validated, subject to future compliance with the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Benjamin F. Martz, and for other purposes."

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the calendar is completed, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is completed.

Mr. LODGE. I can not find that any Senator desires to discuss the treaties to-day, and therefore I shall not make a motion for an open executive session. But I desire to say that, in the opinion of the committee, the treaties ought to be disposed of, and after the disposition of the unanimous agreement on Tuesday next I shall ask the Senate to fix a day on which the discussion of the treaties may close, and if that is not granted the committee will feel themselves compelled to keep the treaties before the Senate until disposed of. I know there are a number of Senators who desire to speak, and I wish them to have ample time to do so, but I think the treaties ought to be proceeded with until they are disposed of.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts will be remembered by the Senate and that we will dispose of the treaties as soon as possible.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to say merely a word in regard to the notice given by the Senator from Massachusetts. Of course, each Senator is actuated by his own views and motives in regard to proceedings in this body, but it is my opinion that the treaties should be considered and that the Senate should remain in session for that purpose.

I am not in sympathy with the adjournment over with a matter of that importance before the Senate, but the Senate has exercised its judgment and has agreed to adjourn over until next Monday. I may be pardoned for expressing the hope that we will commence next week with the consideration of the treaties as the regular and ordinary business of the S nate. I am not going to help to adopt them, and in not asking any delay in reaching their consideration I do not mean to be understood as wanting to see those treaties ratified, but I do want to see the question disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, inasmuch as I made the motion to adjourn over, I think I should say that I made diligent inquiry and found no Senator prepared to discuss the treaties before next Monday.

I join with any and every Senator who is anxious to have the treaties taken up, promptly considered, and voted upon; and it will please me very much, indeed, if the course suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Idaho is insisted upon, commencing next week.

We will adopt that course and pursue it as Mr. CULLOM.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 260), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Mr. PAYNE.

minority may file their views some time during the day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. PAYNE. Even though the House should not be in session at the particular hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That will be agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the views of the minority be printed together with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I present also from the Committee on Ways and Means a privileged resolution (H. Res. 387, H. Rept. 263), distributing the President's message. I do not intend to take up the resolution at this time. It has been submitted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Payne], and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading and that it may go to the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the reading of the resolution referred to be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. In connection therewith the Chair orders it printed and referred to the Union Calendar.

COST OF PHILIPPINE OCCUPATION.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report on House resolution 25, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House resolution 25.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to submit a statement to the House showing the cost which has accrued to the Government of the United States from the beginning of and as the result of the occupation of the Philippine Islands by the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report No. 262 to accompany House resolution 25.

Report No. 262 to accompany House resolution 25.

The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, to whom was referred House resolution No. 25, calling on the President for a statement of Philippine expenses, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Your committee is constrained to believe that because of the vast sums of money that are unquestionably being expended as the result of Philippine occupation the public interests will be conserved by the House having some definite information bearing both on the purposes of disbursements and the amounts expended as well.

Mr. COV of Ohio. Mr. Specker, I desire to be beard on the

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to one hour.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to state that the committee, as the report shows, has had the resolution under consideration and has reported it back with this recommendation. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department is so perfectly clear in its provisions that nothing need be said with reference to its purpose. Its justification is found in the almost universal demand in this country for the fullest possible measure of information bearing upon the subject of Federal disbursements and expenses. We find that only on yesterday a motion was submitted in the United States Senate, which contemplates a higher order of cooperation and coordination as between all of the committees that now have authority to appropriate money. Even that body, believed by many people to be less responsive to public will than this House, has seen the necessity of having a general budget plan of expenditures. It is a sign of the times. So that there is both a universal demand throughout the country and a wellfixed purpose in Congress, not only to have the fullest possible information with respect to all public disbursements and expenses, but to have the information in such a way as will enable the Congress and the departments to correct abuses if they exist. There is a singular lack of information with re-spect to the expenses in the Philippines, and at this time, when there is an enlarging demand for governmental appropriations for the purposes of great improvements—conservation and road building—the time has arrived now when we ought to know what the Government has spent in the Philippines and what the annual burden is at the present time. There have only been two fragmentary reports on this subject. One was submitted in 1902, and had to do with expenses in the Philippines during the years elapsing between 1898 and 1902. Gen. Wood appeared before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department during the last session of Congress, and in reply to an inquiry by the chairman of the committee, with respect to these expenditures he said that it would require considerable time in order to compute them. Nothing since then has been done, and this resolution is really in line and in harmony with the suggestions made by Gen. Wood when he appeared before the committee. Gen. Wood, however, did make a statement, which in a sense supplemented the report made by Secretary Roor when he was acting as Secretary of War. In going through the statement of Gen. Wood and comparing it with the report submitted by the War Department at that time there are some, apparently at least, very marked discrepancies, and I believe now that by the adoption of this resolution the Congress will come into the possession of accurate information bearing upon this great subject, and I sincerely hope that the House will move the adoption of the resolution, because I believe it will conserve the best interests of the Government. I yield back the balance of my

· Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if there is anyone on the opposite side who requires any time in opposition to the resolution. If not, I will ask a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. On motion of Mr. Cox of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table. BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER, TENN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 4339. An act to authorize the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Cumberland River in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Can we have the number of a similar House bill on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gen-

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to get the number of a similar House bill upon the calendar,

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a House bill of substantial identity which has been reported to the House, but has not been acted upon. I ask that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of that House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is in order for consideration; after we get through with that the gentleman can make his motion. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad Co. is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a railroad bridge on its line of railroad across Cumberland River between Maplewood, Tenn., and Overtons, Tenn., at a point suitable to the interest of navigation near the city of Nashville, Tenn.; all in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the only difference between this bill and the House bill is that this bill defines the kind of bridge as a railroad bridge. The House bill, in conformity with the general-bridge act, simply provides for building a bridge. The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Has the gentleman furnished to the gentleman from Illinois the number of the House bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; we have furnished him with the bill. Therefore, I move to amend the Senate act now under consideration by striking out the word "railroad" at the end of line 4 and beginning of line 5, as the word "railroad" is divided between the two lines—
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "railroad."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman I have no particular objection to the amendment except it will require the bill to go back to the Senate and be concurred in there. I will say to the gentleman that there is no desire on the part of anyone affected by this bridge or any citizen that this bridge is to be used for any other purpose than a railroad bridge.

We have three magnificent bridges open to the general public in Nashville, and this is to be used only for railroad purposes by the railroad by which it is constructed.

Mr. ADAMSON. In reply to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I will say that Congress deemed it wise to enact a general-bridge law providing a general scheme that all propositions to build a bridge under the authorization of Congress be presented to the War Department, which should approve the specifications. The further provision in that general bridge act is that after a bridge is built, natural or artificial, railroad or wagon, any person may use that bridge for any purpose under conditions specified in the general act. The committee has never permitted a bill to pass the House since the enactment of the general bridge act with the word "railroad" in it defining the bridge.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Senate does not seem to follow that rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Senate will learn after a while, if we may be allowed to use its name in this connection.

Mr. COOPER rose.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]

Mr. COOPER. Is there any provision in this bill or in the general law limiting the time in which the work shall be begun or completed?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir. The general bridge act provides that unless otherwise provided there shall be certain limitations, namely, one year in which to begin and three years in which to complete. That is in the general act.

which to complete. That is in the general act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was read a third time and passed

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title by striking out the word "railroad," so as to make the title conform to the body of the act.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. Adamson, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RASTARDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 13041, an act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendments be not agreed to, and that the bill be referred to a committee of conference between the House and

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. John-SON of Kentucky, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. DYER.

Mr. Connell, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until the 29th, on account of illness.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose there was pending a point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] to an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. I submit to the Chair that the amendment can not be changed now, except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 56, after the word "dollars," in line 2, by inserting the following:

"No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] briefly.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the particular attention of the Chair in the discussion of this point of order. In order that the Chair may get an intelligent estimate and comprehension of the present point of order against the pending amendment, it will be necessary for the Chair to consider its connection with reference to similar amendments which have been offered, designed to accomplish the same purpose. Chair will remember that the first amendment offered, appearing in the Congressional Record on page 1208, on Saturday, January 20, was designed to create—
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The amendment which has just been reported from the desk is not the amendment, as I understand, which was reported from the desk on the last day that this bill was under consideration. What is the amendment now? If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] wishes to change the amendment that was reported when it was offered, I think it would require unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois wherein the difference lies.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman will find the amendment on page 1239 of the RECORD. It is exactly the same.

Mr. CARLIN. I understand it is not exactly the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has before him the amendment as it was read by the Clerk on the last day.

Mr. CARLIN. I beg the Chair's pardon. There was a change in the language.

Mr. MANN. I remember the amendment that was offered the other day very distinctly. If it is the ruling of the Chair that this is the same amendment, I will not dispute it.

Without objection, the amendment will be The CHAIRMAN. again reported, and for the information of Members the Chair will state that the amendment will be found on page 1239 of the

Amend page 56 by inserting, after line 2, the following:
"No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein."

Mr. BURLESON. It is exactly the same.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the two amendments that I called to the attention of the Chair, in order that I may refer to the matter later on, is that the amendment stated on page 56 is not the resolution as reported in the RECORD and now read from the Clerk's desk. The resolution in all other respects is identical. There appear in the resolu-tion as it now reads the words "Amend by inserting, on page 56, after line 2, the following." Those words were not in the amendment as reported in the RECORD. To that extent it was changed.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not recall, Mr. Chairman, if it was offered at this particular point in the bill or later on, when we reached the item relating to the schools; but that is a matter of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that that is not a matter of substance. As a matter of fact, those words were read by the Clerk to indicate the proper place where they should be entered in the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. I think the Chair will find this to be the case, that the mover of the amendment himself indicated the paragraph which it was desired to amend, and that must appear in the amendment. Otherwise the point of order would lie that, having passed the paragraph, the amendment would not be germane. Therefore the amendment must state the page and line, to show where it is desired to have it inserted, in order to give notice to the House where it is proposed to insert the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is in order at any place in the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. That is not correct.

Mr. BURLESON. At any place relating to public schools.

Mr. CARLIN. At any place relating to public schools this amendment would have been germane, but it would not be germane to any other section in the bil. It just occurs to me, if the Chair please, that it is a well-known parliamentary rule in this House that you can not offer an amendment until the proper section of the bill has been reached and read, and it must be offered at that time and place; and unless it be so done it is not germane and the point of order will lie. But, if the Chair please, I am ready to go on with the discussion of the point so that the Chair can consider both at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to say that the purpose of all the amendments which have been offered by the Appropriations Committee since the Chair held that the paragraph itself was out of order has been to accomplish the same thing expressed in the original paragraph which the Chair held to be in conflict with the rule, namely, as changing the present statutory law relating to the admission of nonresident pupils. Under the present law a nonresident pupil is admitted to the public schools of this city provided his parents are taxpayers in the District of Columbia. That is the only condition that he has to comply with.

In order to prevent that class of children from attending the public schools in the District of Columbia the Appropriations Committee first inserted in the bill a paragraph reciting the present law and then providing that any nonresident pupil might be admitted to the public schools on the payment of an amount of money to be fixed by the board of commissioners.

The Chair held that that was affirmative legislation and therefore out of order; whereupon two other amendments were offered, the first dropping the proviso and inserting the word "except." The Chair held that to be out of order, the purpose plainly being to change the present law with reference to the admission of nonresident pupils. Finally we come to this art-fully drawn provision, intended to accomplish the same identical purpose, namely, to provide a different rule for the admission of nonresident children. All of these amendments have been offered under the guise of a limitation. I now invite the attention of the Chair to section 826 of the present Manual, found on page 406. There the Chair will find precedents for my contention, which hold that though a limitation can be placed upon an appropriation bill in entirely negative words, it says that "care should also be taken that the language of limitation be not such as, when fairly construed, would change extation be not such as, when fairly construed, would change existing law or justify an executive officer in assuming an intent to change the existing law." Does the Chair catch the point? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is following the gentleman.

Mr. CARLIN. Now, if the Chair please, it is a very simple matter for us to test this amendment by that precedent and other precedents which are quoted to sustain that view. In words, if this amendment may in any way justify an executive officer in construing it to mean a change of existing law, it is not a limitation and has no place upon this appropriation bill. Now, let us see if it changes existing law. amendment provides that a nonresident can not be admitted to the schools unless he pays taxes—they have stricken out the word "provided" and inserted the word "excess"—unless he pays taxes in excess of the estimated cost of tuition. There is no present statute which provides that he shall pay taxes in excess of the cost of tuition, and that is exactly the provision that they have written into every amendment that they have offered.

It is a change of existing law. It justifies an executive officer in construing it as a change in existing law, and in effect prevents a nonresident pupil from entering the schools of the District of Columbia unless he pays a sum in excess of the esti-mated cost of tuition. That is a direction to the executive officer to estimate the cost, and requires an affirmative act by the executive officer. He is charged with the duty of estimating the cost the nonresident applicant for tuition must pay in excess of the estimated cost. So when we come to apply the rulings of the Chair—and all previous Chairs—as expressed in this language, "but care should be taken that the language of limitation be not such as when fairly construed it would change existing law, or justify an executive officer in assuming an intent to change existing law," it is apparent that this is a plain purpose to change existing law. It imposes on the commissioner the duty of applying a different rule to non-resident pupils than that which now exists and is required by

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, there is no concealment of the fact on the part of the movers of this amendment that their plain purpose, the plain intention of the committee, is to change existing law. The Chair has three times ruled that they can not existing law. The Chair has three times ruled that they can not do it upon this appropriation bill in the form in which it first appeared as an original paragraph, and they failed to do it three times by subsequent amendment—first, they had the word "provided," and then the word "except," and finally they dropped both words out, but retained the exact language that the Chair has held is new legislation.

relating to nonresident pupils. Every line of it is new legislation, and imposes a new condition upon nonresident pupils, and imposes new executive duties upon the executive officers of the District of Columbia. What are those new duties? They must estimate the cost which the applicant must pay in excess of the estimated cost. Who is to require that payment? The school authorities. That duty is imposed upon them by implication, and the rule says in plain terms that nothing should be admitted under the guise of a limitation which would justify an executive officer in assuming an intent to change the law.

Does the Chair think an executive officer would be justified under that provision in assuming an intent to change the law? He would not be justified in doing anything else. It is not only an intent to change the law, but it is a specific change of law which it becomes the duty of the executive officer to carry into force and effect. He could not carry that into effect now, because the law does not permit him to exclude the children. He is compelled to accept the application of the children now if they or their parents are taxpayers in the District of Columbia, but under this provision they would not be compelled to accept their application unless they paid "in excess of the estimated cost of tuition."

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the effect of that? The parent of a child may be paying $1.50 taxes to the District of Columbia and the child is admissible to the schools. Under this provision if it should appear after the estimated cost of tuition has been found by the executive officers to be perhaps $40 or $50, then the executive officer under this provision would have but two options; he would have to exclude the child from the schools or require him to pay a sum in excess of the estimated cost of the tuition.

The Chair knows what this means. This is a bald attempt to induce the Chair, under the guise of a limitation, to make a ruling which means the reversal of the rulings the Chair has made three times in the last few days on the same subject. The Chair has ruled that this language is new legislation in an original paragraph, and by the rules of the House if it is new legislation, requiring any affirmative act to be done, unless it be entirely negative, it can not be held to be a limitation.

Once more, for the information of the Chair, I quote this language, which is sustained by an unbroken line of decisions:

Care should also be taken that the language of limitation be not such as, when fairly construed, would change existing law or justify an executive officer in assuming an intent to change existing law.

The Chair has before it the bold declaration of the committee that it is the purpose of the amendment to change existing law. It has before it for its further guide and advice its own ruling that this language is a change in existing law. So it remains for the Chair to determine in the last analysis whether by artful, skillful language the real purpose of the ruling of the Chair shall be thwarted and the real purpose of the rules of this House diverted.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin], I desire to state this: The effect of this amendment is clearly to limit the benefits of the appropriation to a particular class of pupils, or, to state it in a different way, to exclude a particular class of pupils from the benefits to be derived from its expenditure. Undoubtedly the House has the power, if it sees fit, to place any character of limitation upon an appropriation sought to be made. If the House saw fit to do it, it could limit this appropriation to those pupils who are under 4 years of age, and it would be clearly within the rule. We now limit this appropriation so as to exclude a particular class of pupils from the benefits thereof, and the amendment is clearly within the rules of the House.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, just one moment in answer to the last suggestion of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman says that this appropriation is intended to exclude certain nonresident pupils. On the contrary, it provides expressly for their admission. It is not an exclusion. It provides that they shall be admitted to the public schools, and provides the terms upon which they shall be admitted, namely, that they shall pay a tuition in excess of the estimated cost of admission. Is there any exclusion in that language? It is a provision under which they may be admitted, and it is designed for that purpose, but to admit them under a different condition of law. I am surprised at the gentleman having reached the conclusion himself that this language was designed to exclude certain children from the benefits of this appropriation. On the contrary, it expressly provides that they shall enjoy the benefits of this appropriation. They shall have all of its bounty, all of its blessings, provided they pay a tuition in excess of the estimated cost of tuition. It is an artful method of changing by language only the very amendment that the Chair has ruled to be out of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, it is very hard indeed to add anything to the full and clear argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin], and I can not realize how it is possible for there to be two sides to this question. It seems to me so clear and so distinct that this is legislation, pure and simple, that I can not understand how the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] can hope to bring it in as part of an appropriation bill. I find on page 405 of the Manual, in the third line from the top, these words:

Propositions to establish affirmative directions for executive officers, even in cases where they may have discretion under the law so to do, or to take away an authority or discretion conferred by law, are subject to the point of order.

We certainly can not say that under the existing law the present officers have not authority to admit pupils, whoever they may be and wherever they may be from, whose parents pay taxes in the District of Columbia. Under the particular amendment proposed it takes away from them that discretion. It takes away from them the authority to admit these pupils. The language of the amendment is not only subject to the point of order and adds new legislation prohibited by the rules, but is also manifestly unfair to our people, and should certainly not be tolerated as new legislation in a District appropriation bill. The tuition may be $20 a year, and the man who is not able to pay $20 in taxes, or who does not pay $20 in taxes, but who may pay seventeen or eighteen or nineteen dollars, under this amendment is excluded from participation in that which his richer neighbor may enjoy.

I do not propose to take up much time of this committee, but it seems that the language which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] read from page 406 of the Manual is conclusive on this point. Brushing aside from this amendment all verbiage, taking it as we all understand it, it is purely and simply a change of existing law, it matters not what the language may be; and any Member of this House when asked whether it is a change of existing law will say that it is. I think, therefore, that under this rule it is absolutely impossible to bring in an amendment at this time, no matter how skillfully it may be drawn, no matter what the words may be, if, when the whole thing is stripped and looked at in plain, broad light, we find it is a change of existing law it is certainly out of order. Anyone who will read this amendment or the two previous amendments will say that the pure intent of this provision is to prohibit nonresidents who do not pay sufficient taxes in the District of Columbia from coming in here and participating in these advantages.

Now, as I have said, the fairness of this amendment is not germane to the subject. It would be proper, perhaps, to say at this time that the State of Maryland, which I have the pleasure to represent, in part, has never been in anywise close or mean to the District of Columbia. For 100 years or more her roads have been open to everybody who wanted to travel over them. The entire State has been subject to the enjoyment of the District of Columbia, and as the years roll on and as the District becomes more populated and as the city of Washington grows, Maryland is bound to become a part of the suburbs of this District, is bound to bear a large part of the expense of the people who travel through that State and enjoy its benefits, its beauties, and its advantages. So, I say, when you come down to the question, because it is a small question, when you exclude the children of officeholders, when you exclude those who pay excess of tuition in taxes, why, the number remaining is so small and negligible that it is hardly worth considering, and when you think of the small number of children who come here and desire to get the greater benefits of the schools in the District because of the large population and the benefit of large and graded schools—when you take these matters into consideration it seems to me that the amendment is too small to be taken up in an appropriation bill, where it certainly is out of order, not needed, and should not be inserted, and I sincerely hope the Chair may find it so. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the question of limitation upon appropriations is marked so clearly that it is generally understood, and the rule is easy of application if it be clearly stated. Congress is under no obligation to appropriate for any services authorized by law. It need not appropriate to maintain these schools. It would be in order to propose an amendment which would prohibit the use of appropriations for schools, for the maintenance of schools in which pupils were admitted in accordance with the law which it is contended here is changed. The act of April 14, 1906, provides:

That hereafter pupils shall not be admitted to or taught free of charge in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who, during such tutelage, do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia.

That is the law, and yet it is in order as a limitation upon the appropriations for schools to provide that no part of the appropriation made for the support of schools should be used for maintaining schools to which pupils were admitted under

Mr. CARLIN. Unless they pay taxes in excess

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me to make my statement to the Chair, he can correct later any errors which he believes I make. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that there can be no question that under the rules of the House a limitation prohibiting the use of money appropriated in this bill for the support of any school in which there were pupils admitted in accordance with the law would be in order, because it has been repeatedly held that the House is not bound to appropriate to carry out services, projects, and so forth, authorized by law. The House may withhold appropriations for such purposes. Now, what does this amendment do-

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not change the law in the slightest, but it withholds the appropriations. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to ask a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do. Under the existing law any pupil who pays taxes or the child of a parent who pays taxes can enter the schools of the District, can he not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I have just read the law. Mr. LINTHICUM. Under this law the parent must pay taxes in excess of the tuition unless he is an officeholder or something of that kind, must be not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is absolutely apparent; yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is absolutely appared Mr. LINTHICUM. Is not that a change of law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not; and if the gentleman would permit me to attempt to make my statement in a connected and logical way I shall endeavor to demonstrate it, but I can not do it if interrupted by the asking of questions that are absolutely apparent and which there is no attempt to controvert. If this amendment is not in order, it can not be made in order by any subterfuge. Mr. Chairman, so I may get the matter straightened out, I repeat that it would be in order to offer an amendment to withhold this appropriation for the support or maintenance of any school in which pupils of the class indicated were admitted. Now, what does the amendment do? Merely places a restriction upon the use of the appropriation. It withholds the appropriation from the support of any school in which pupils are admitted who or whose parents do not pay taxes amounting to a definite, be-cause easily ascertained, sum. Gentlemen are much mistaken as to what constitutes a limitation. as to what constitutes a limitation. A limitation under the rule must be negative in character. I assert this provision is negative in character. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling which illustrates what can be done under the rule. A paragraph in an appropriation bill had been read, as follows:

To meet the actual and necessary expenses of the delegates of the United States to the Third International Conference of American States to be held in the city of Rio de Janeiro, beginning on the 21st day of July, 1906, and of their salaried clerical assistants, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State, and to continue available during the fiscal year of 1907, $60,000.

I shall read just what happened, so that the Chair will have clearly in his mind the distinction between the legislative provision and the limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. What volume?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Volume IV, section 3971, page 658, of Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. John 'A. Sullivan, of Massachusetts, offered the following amendment:

"Page 2, after line 5, insert: 'That said delegates of the United States are hereby instructed to advocate the establishment of reciprocal tariff relations between the United States and other American States.'"

Mr. Lucius H. Littauer, of New York, made the point of order that the amendment proposed legislation.

The Chairman sustained the point of order.

It was clear that it was a positive legislative direction, and therefore contrary to the rule. I then proposed the following amendment:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended unless the program for the conference contains provision for a discussion of reciprocal trade relations between the countries participating in the conference.

A point of order was raised to that and overruled, because it was a purely negative limitation upon the use of the appro-The appropriation could not be used unless certain conditions existed.

A most extraordinary ruling, and one which illustrates what can be done under the form of limitation, appears in connection with an amendment that was offered in connection with the compensation of certain postal employees, Volume IV, section 3976, page 661.

The amendment was:

mend by striking out of lines 8 and 9, page 23, the words "twenty llon two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and substitute the following:

"Twenty-three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless in the use thereof the carriers hereinafter mentioned shall be paid salaries as follows during the year beginning July 1, 1904, viz: In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more, carriers who have served more than three years, $1,200 per annum; in all cities containing a population of less than 75,000, carriers who have served more than two years, $1,000 per annum."

The point of order was made to the provision, and after an elaborate discussion the Chairman held that while the effect of the provision might make it possible to expend any part of the appropriation, because under the law the compensation suggested could not be paid, nevertheless as it limited the use of the appropriation itself, under the rules of the House the limitation was in order.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that at times there has been some difficulty in determining whether a provision is a limitation or whether it is legislative in character. But this amendment, in my opinion, is quite clearly a limitation and in order. withholds an appropriation for the support of a school unless certain designated conditions exist in it.

The Chair is familiar with the ruling relative to the establishment of canteens at soldiers' homes. I do not have it at hand, but it is one that has been referred to in so many decisions that the Chair is thoroughly familiar with it. The amendments offered and upheld provided that no part of the appropriations made for the support of soldiers' homes should be expended or apportioned to soldiers' homes in which a bar or canteen was maintained.

It was argued that there was no law prohibiting the bar or canteen; that this was legislation. It was held that it merely withheld the use of money unless certain conditions indicated existed.

In the appropriation for the support of certain institutions, which required the Secretary of Agriculture to certify to certain matters, the following amendment was offered (sec. 3942):

Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of Utah until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is en-gaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations.

A point of order having been interposed, it was overruled. The Chair, however, indicated that perhaps one reason was that the point of order had been interposed too late, and expressed the opinion that it was merely a limitation. But the Chair will see on the following page that the same question was raised, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of Indiana or any other State or Territory until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy.

A point of order was raised to that provision and it was overruled. So that so long as the amendment offered is negative, prohibitory as to the use of the appropriation, the rulings have held that the amendment is a limitation and, under the rules of the House, in order. The fact that a service is authorized for which the appropriation might be held payable does not in any way affect the result of the operation of the rule.

There are other authorities, Mr. Chairman, along the same line. The gentleman from Virginia is under the error of believ-ing that simply because children of a certain class are admitted under the law to the schools of the District of Columbia, therefore no limitation upon the use of the appropriation can be made.

There is another decision with which the Chair, I am quite sure, is familiar. It has probably been referred to in the consideration of this bill. A limitation which would prohibit the payment of pensions to a certain designated class of persons who under the law are entitled to pensions has been held to be in order, so long as it is in form a negative prohibition upon the use of the appropriation. If persons were entitled to pensions for various reasons, an amendment prohibiting the payment of any part of the appropriation to a person who was in receipt of an income of a certain amount would be in order. So this amendment, which merely limits the use to which the appropriation can be put, is in order, in my opinion, under the rules of the House.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take up the further time of the House, but I am sure that the Chair must, if only looking casually at this provision, have concluded, as we did, that the amendment was in order. It was only after a very careful examination of the amendment offered that the real joker in it could be discovered, and for that reason I feel that it might be well to call the attention of the Chair to a case almost similar, and to conditions similar, where the whole question of limitation was considered fairly in this House and settled in favor of the point of order that was made against the provi-

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] argues that this enlarges the restriction in the appropriation. That was his exact language. Now, I admit that if this amendment simply provided that no part of this appropriation could be used for the purpose of paying the expenses of teaching any nonresident child, that would be a limitation in negative terms and that the amendment might be in order. But if the Chair holds this amendment to be in order, he will have spoiled the symmetry and effect of every other ruling he has made on this bill, and he will have put it in the power of an appropriating committee to do, under the guise of a limitation, the very thing which this Chair and other chairmen have held could not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question from the Chair there? Does the Chair understand the gentleman to concede that an amendment which provided simply that no part of the appropriation could be used for nonresident pupils would be in order?

Mr. CARLIN. No; I do not concede that. But there is more authority for that view than there is for this. That might be the case, but it might change existing law and be subject to a point of order.

I ask the Chair to turn to page 672 of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents. Here we have the subject fully discussed in almost the identical language of this amendment. I refer to section 3984, where it says, in capitals:

Where a proposition might be construed by the executive officer as a modification of a statute, it may not be held as such a limitation of appropriation as is permissible on a general appropriation bill. On February 20, 1907, the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Victor Murdden, of Kansas, offered this amendment:

"Amend by adding, after the word dollars, in line 2, page 21:

"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in payment for transportation of the malls by railroad routes where the average weight of mails per day has been computed by the use of a divisor less than the whole number of days such malls have been weighed."

Mr. Howard M. Snapp, of Illinois, made the point of order that the amendment proposed legislation.

After debate, the chairman held:

"The existing law has received a construction by the officers charged with the duty of administering it, and that construction the Chair feels bound to follow. The proposed amendment changes existing law as construed by the proper officer, by changing the divisor."

I will not quote the balance of the ruling, because it is not necessary for my point. There the only change in the law was the change in the divisor, and the limitation was sought to be made through the change of the divisor.

Now, if the Chair please, to boil this thing down to the very Now, if the Chair please, to boil this thing down to the very last analysis, it is a simple proposition. The present law provides that nonresident pupils may enter the public schools of the District of Columbia by the payment of taxes. This amendment provides that they may enter only when they pay taxes in excess of the estimated tuition. They enter now by the payment of taxes, however small. If this provision is adopted, they can only enter by the payment of taxes in excess of the estimated tuition. As I have previously said, there are several things to be done by the executive officers. First, he must estimate the cost of tuition. Then he must ascertain whether the applicant pays taxes in excess of the estimated tuition. Under the present law he simply has to pay taxes. Under this amendment he must pay taxes in excess of the estimated cost of The gentleman says that does not change anything. The change that is made is as great as the difference between night and day. If this amendment does not prevail, then nonresident pupils will enter the schools upon payment of small taxes. If this amendment does prevail, they must pay taxes in excess of the estimated cost of tuition. That is the difference. This is not negative but affirmative in its effect. The amendment is a qualification for admission to the schools and not a limitation to prevent admission. It simply provides that you must pay more money than you pay now. That is the last analysis, and that is the common sense of it. Any other con-struction is lacking in reason and in common sense, and these gentlemen know as well as anybody knows that that is the effect of it, and the Chair must know it. He can not help knowing that the difference between paying 50 cents taxes and paying taxes in excess of the estimated cost of tuition is a change, and the officers charged with administering the school affairs of this city are required to ascertain, first, the estimated cost of tuition; and second, whether or not the pupil pays taxes in excess of the estimated cost.

It is a surprise to me that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald], with all his skill and all his reputation as a parliamentarian, has been unable to devise some amendment which would accomplish the purpose desired by the committee. They speak of it as a plain, simple thing to do. They have tried it four times, and three times the Chair has said they were in error

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman from Virginia perhaps think that part of his argument had better be reserved until after the Chair has passed upon this amendment?

Mr. CARLIN. If I thought that, I would not make the argument now. The point I am making is that these gentlemen have contended each time that the amendment offered was a simple' little limitation. They contended it then as strongly as they contend it now. They looked as bland and mienful then as now. Their faces have not expressed the shadow of a doubt. Three times they have tried, with mild and innocentlooking faces, to convince the Chair that these were simple limitations. Three times their purpose has been exposed, and now they come to the fourth. They are trying to make children who can now enter the public schools by the simple payment of taxes come in under a different condition and a different law, and require the payment of taxes in excess of the estimated cost of tuition.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas is as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein.

To that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] makes the point of order. On behalf of the amendment it is insisted that it is a limitation upon the appropriation such as is proper under the rules and precedents. That has been pretty elaborately argued. The Chair will not go into any long analysis of it. There was a provision in the bill as it was reported from the committee, which appears on page 56 of the bill, that changed existing law. It was insisted that that was in order under what was called the Holman rule, and it was under the Holman rule, measuring it by the Holman rule, that the occupant of the chair at that time, Mr. Pou, of North Carolina, passed upon the question. The gentleman from North Carolina passed on the question in precisely the same manner as would have the present occupant of the chair if he had been in the chair at that time-that it was not in order under the Holman rule.

Then it was proposed as an amendment by way of limitation, and, as then proposed, it carried affirmative legislation. It provided that "any other nonresident pupil may be admitted to and taught in said public schools on the payment of such amount to be fixed by the board of education, with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition and cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupil." And provided further, that "all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

At first the present occupant of the chair overruled the point of order which was made to that amendment. But, upon that order being vacated by unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and being argued by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Chair reversed the ruling and sustained the point of order.

The most serious objection to it suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] was that there were two provisions, one which would be construed by the District officials as imposing positive duties—the language "by the payment of such amount with the approval of the Commissioners of said District," and again, that provision that "payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia," are positive affirmative directions of law; as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that they change existing law by making law where none before existed.

Then the attention of the Chair was called to certain expressions in the Manual and Digest, and the Chair reversed himself and sustained the point of order. Now it is presented again in the form in which it has just been read. The decisions on the matter of limitations are not uniform so far as the Chair has been able to find. There has been considerable variation in the line of ruling on the question of limitation, but the Chair has examined in the last two days the precedents with considerable care and arrived at the conclusion, measuring it by the cases that have been read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and some other cases, one or two of which the Chair may insert in the RECORD, that this is in order now as a limitation on the appropriation, and the Chair overrules the

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment: , or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the District of Columbia in excess of such estimated cost of tuition.

Mr. CARLIN: Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that. Now, it is perfectly plain what is meant by the amend-

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, this does not change the effect of the limitation in the slightest. In the first amendment it provided that "if the pupil owns land or property on which taxes are paid," and this provides that "if the parents own property or land on which taxes are paid."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. As I understood the original amendment, it provided that the pupils must own the property.
Mr. BURLESON. That is right.

Mr. CARLIN. No; the original amendment provided for both the pupil and the parents. The gentleman has given the wrong

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will read the original proposition he will see that the payment of taxes applies only to the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is negative in character and the amendment to the amendment is affirmative in character, and therefore the Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair is in error as to the effect of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

I think it is also negative in character.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is in error about that, it would affect his ruling.

Mr. MANN. It would make the amendment read:

No part of any money appropriated, etc., * * * or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties or who do not pay taxes, etc.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the law has this provision in it, and the only difference is that it withholds the appropriation unless the amount of taxes paid by the parents is in excess of a designated sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair upon examination finds that the negative is continued to this part of the amendment. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] an amendment that he wants to offer before I undertake to discuss this?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that my amendment to the amendment be acted upon first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire recognition on the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. CARLIN. No. I took the floor in order to give the gentleman from Maryland an opportunity to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to offer an amendment by way of a substitute?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, this is the only amendment that could be considered at this time. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas. The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following amendment to the amendment: "And such pupils or parents of such pupils who pay taxes less than the estimated cost of their tuition shall receive credit for such payment upon their bill for such tuition."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment, although I may say that I am in sympathy with the purpose that the gentleman has in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maryland on the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the purpose of his amend-As I understand it, it provides that if the amount of taxes is paid on property owned in the District, and it does not equal the amount of the tuition, that that shall be taken into consideration or deducted from the tuition when the tuition is made.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is the idea.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is subject to the point of order, but I will not insist upon the point of order.

The point of order is withdrawn. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, let me ask for what year the taxes are to be paid?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no mention in the amendment

Mr. MANN. Well, for how long a time?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that I have no objection to any change that may be suggested in this amendment. My sole purpose is that the man who pays small taxes shall have credit for that payment just the same as the man who pays taxes in excess of the estimated cost of tuition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that under the gentleman's amendment the effect would not be that. When are the taxes payable in the District?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I suggest that the gentleman might insert there the words "for the year preceding."

Mr. BURLESON. Add after the word "taxes" the words "for any one year" or "the year preceding."

Mr. CARLIN. That is satisfactory; or make it read for the words the words the words.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment by inserting the words "for the year preceding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the amendment be reported.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following to the amendment: "And such pupils or parents of such pupils who pay taxes less than the estimated cost of their tuition shall receive credit for such payment upon their bill for such tuition for the preceding year."

Mr. BURLESON. That would not be right. I suggest that the gentleman redraft his amendment.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order and have it reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire if the gentleman has his amendment prepared.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is attempting to redraft his amendment.

WATER METERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, while this is going on I desire to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter received this morning in regard to the placing of water meters in private houses, which gives information which was not known by me on

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the Record the letter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

1706 JACKSON STREET NE., Washington, D. C., January 24, 1912.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I beg to assure you that citizens of the District of Columbia appreciate your protest against curtailing the supply of water to small householders. I note, however, that no one on the floor of the House on Tuesday challenged the statement that water rates were lower here than elsewhere in the country, although Mr. Mann seems to think that in Chicago the rates are somewhat lower. A further statement was made that weter rates in the District are $4.50 for 15,000 cubic feet. It should have been added that the rate has recently been raised to $4.50 for 7,500 cubic feet, and this without giving the citizens an opportunity to be heard in protest, although such a hearing was promised to the Rhode Island Avenue Suburban Citizens' Association months before the order increasing the rate was entered by the District Commissioners.

In this connection, I deem it proper to suggest that the so-called $4.50 rate is deceptive, for this reason: Taking my own case as an example, when the water main was placed in the street in front of my home an assessment of $125 was placed against my abutting 100 feet of property. The interest on this sum at 6 per cent, the amount I am required to pay on deferred payments on my property, is $7.50, which, added to the $4.50 for service, amounts to $12. Thus I am in fact charged $12 per annum for my water, the amount of which I may use for that sum being also now curtailed one-half. Either that or every property owner in the District is an involuntary stockholder in a concern paying no dividends.

I have brought this fact out because no one on the floor of the House on Tuesday seemed to appreciate the real conditions here.

Every one of your arguments against curtailing the use of water is absolutely sound. If healthful conditions in the District are desired; if lawns and gardens inure to the beauty of our National Capital; if dust-ridden streets are to contribute to the comfort of our people, the liberal use of water should not only be permitted but encouraged. In fact, there are any number of progressive people everywhere who believe that pure water should be furnished by the municipality or State as freely as street lights or police protection.

Very truly, yours,

DAN C. VAUGHAN.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Committee is waiting by unanimous consent. If there be objection-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to temporarily pass this item?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily pass this item until the gentleman from Maryland can prepare his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas requests unanimous consent that the amendment be temporarily passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understand we pass not only the amendment but the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That the entire matter be passed. matter before the House is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, which was held by the Chair to be in

Mr. BURLESON. That amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it was an amendment to the amendment which was adopted. The next matter in order is the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to the paragraph on page 73, which reads:

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,480.

The gentleman from Kentucky made the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law. The question for the Chair to pass upon is whether there is authority to appropriate for the interest and the sinking fund. All the authority—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Pardon me there one moment, Mr. Chairman. The point I undertook to make in my argument was to appropriate a specific sum; that the law already provided for an amount without an appropriation of a specific sum and that the other law was directory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that phase of the contention of the gentleman. All the law that has been cited to the Chair and all the Chair has been able to find is contained in the act of 1874, in the act of 1878, and the act of 1879, except a slight amendment which was in the act of 1875 amending the act of 1874. The language applicable to this matter in the act of 1874, as amended by the act of 1875, is as follows:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated by this act, and by causing to be levied upon property within said District as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Perhaps it renders this statute easier of construction if the arrangement be changed in reading and we omit that part after the first comma down to the third comma, and read it, "and the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity." How? Going back, first, "by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act," and, second, "by causing to be levied upon property within said District such taxes as will do so." The Chair can not escape the conclusion that the expression is the contemplated in the second soil of the second soil o sion "by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act" means something, and the Chair thinks that what it does mean is made clear by a subsequent section of the act of 1874, which appointed a joint committee to draft an act for the government of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the policy which had been defined by the passage of the act of 1874. And it is clear from all that occurred in that act of 1874 that it was then in contemplation, not only by the committee that reported the act of 1874, but in the contemplation of the Congress, because Congress passed the act, that there should be proportional appropriations, that a certain part of the expenses of the District of Columbia should be paid out of the funds of the Government of the United States and another part should be paid out of the revenues raised in the District.

Consequently the Chair regards that section of the act of 1874, as amended by the act of 1875, as being very persuasive and having a very potent meaning.

We come next to the act of June 11, 1877, the so-called "organic act" of the District of Columbia. That provides:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

It seems to the Chair that is clear authority for the payment of the interest, and the Chair suggests that the expression in regard to the method of crediting may be explainable when we consider the time at which the act of 1878 passed it was a general provision of law. It was not in an appropriation bill. It was a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it, and the Chair thinks that the direction as to the crediting may have been put in by reason of the time at which the act was

With the matter of bookkeeping, upon the proposition of whether or not the Government is bound for half the interest under the terms of this act, the Chair does not deem it necessary for him to pass. The sole question before the Chair be-Is there authority of law to appropriate? And if that authority exists, then of course the appropriation must be administered under the law. And the responsibility rests not upon the legislative branch or upon the Chair in passing upon the point of order but upon the administrative officers. Chair thinks there is authority of law for appropriating for the interests in the manner appropriated in this bill, and that brings us to the act of 1879, contained in the sundry civil bill,

And there is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, at maturity, which said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof, and all bonds so redeemed shall cease to bear interest, and shall be canceled and destroyed in the same manner that United States bonds are canceled and destroyed.

That section has given the Chair more difficulty than any of the others. But upon the whole, construing it as best the Chair could, the Chair has concluded that it clearly authorizes Congress to appropriate for the sinking fund. And the same thing, however, as to the administration of that appropriation after it is made applies to this section as applies to the interest act to which the Chair has just made reference. Believing that there is found in the law as quoted the authority to make the appropriation, the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. Johnson of Kentucky. If I correctly understand the Chair, the Chair makes no ruling at all in this matter as to the half-and-half payment of this?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not deem it necessary to pass upon that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I properly understood you in Now, my inquiry is as to whether or not you in your decision express any opinion as to the purchasing of bonds at exceeding par, or that you hold you have nothing to do with

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expresses no opinion upon that. It is certainly a matter with which the administrative officers of the Government are charged, not the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to inquire whether an amendment to the sinking fund section is now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer an amendment. Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, if my friend will permit, I hope the discussion of the amendment will not take precedence over the amendment which was proposed a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. That was passed by unanimous consent. The Chair thinks this matter should proceed until its conclusion now. Of course, that is a matter within the control of the committee.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] if he has finished his amendment yet?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4109. An act to restore the name of Oregon Avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 73 I move to strike out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and in lieu thereof insert an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 73 by striking out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and inserting the

Amend page 73 by striking out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and inserting the following:

Mr. BURLESON. Upon that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose seriously to discuss the point of order. It is a precedent so well established, and it has gone through so many years that the statute itself can be offered, that I do not propose to dis-

Mr. Chairman, in this matter I do not propose to change the law in the least. The amendment which I have offered is nothing more and nothing less than a copy of the law as it was originally passed by Congress. If this amendment is adopted, it will change the law in no respect whatever. But I have contended all along, and I insist now, that if this sinking fund and interest item remains in the bill as it is it gives the Committee on Appropriations the right to say how much money shall go toward interest and sinking fund, when the law itself says that the Secretary of the Treasury, in the first instance, is directed to set apart such an amount as is sufficient to pay the interest on these bonds; and next, that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by law to set apart such a fund as is sufficient, with the interest thereon, to pay these bonds when they reach maturity.

Now, that is a simple proposition. These four lines in this bill now are used by the Committee on Appropriations to say to the Secretary of the Treasury how much money he shall set apart toward the payment of the interest and toward the payment of the principal of these bonds, whereas the law says, and says plainly and emphatically, that that is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury alone.

I have said it so often that it is unnecessary for me to repeat it now, that I believe the United States Government should, as it originally bound itself to do, see to it that this interest and principal are paid. I insist now that the Committee on Appropriations shall not deprive the Secretary of the Treasury of the right, which has been given him under the law, to say how much money he shall set apart for interest and sinking fund. I insist that the Secretary of the Treasury be allowed all his rights under these two sections of the law, and that he shall determine how much money is necessary to pay the interest, and then pay it.

Mr. Chairman, for no other reason than that the law may be held inviolate as to these bonds, I have offered the law itself. I have offered the law as an amendment to something which, in my judgment, with all due deference to the Chair,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the Chair has held that the item carried in this bill is authorized by law. The gentleman now moves to strike it out and to substitute therefor certain language which he says is the law itself. If such is the case, as it does not change the law, then I insist that there is no necessity for the amendment. I am unable, by a hasty reading of the amendment, to determine whether it effects a change of law, but if it does not, then I again insist that it is wholly unnecessary. If it does, I make the point of order that it is legislation, and not authorized under the rules of the House.

Congress has a right to make the appropriation, I say now that Congress should be entitled to make the appropriation just as the law says it shall be made. I am not opposed to the appropriation being made. I want it made, but I want it made according to law. I want to take it out of the hands of anybody short of the Secretary of the Treasury to construe what that law means. This amendment offered by me changes no law, but it continues the law that has been made, and under my amendment an appropriation is made, and the Secretary of the Treasury is given the discretion to determine the amount, instead of the Committee on Appropriations doing it.

Mr. BURLESON. Conceding the correctness of the ruling of the Chair that the item is authorized by law, what is the necessity for the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair has ruled nothing more and nothing less than that an appropriation is authorized. This amendment offered by me authorizes an appropriation, but instead of the Committee on Appropriations saying how much money is to be appropriated, I say let the Secretary of the Treasury determine it under my amendment, which does appropriate the money and which is the law.

Mr. BURLESON. Then the position of the gentleman is that we ought to carry in an appropriation bill in detail every act of Congress under which an appropriation is sought to be made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not; but the chairman of your committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD], said this morning that no appropriation is necessary to carry out existing law. Upon that theory no appropriation of any specific amount is now necessary to carry out this provision of law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken as to what I said. I said that Congress is not under any obligation to appropriate money to carry out the purposes authorized by law

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Take it at that

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amendment offered by me does appropriate money. It is a continuation of an appropriation under law, and it is for the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the amount. I asked the other day if this committee could tell me how much of this amount was due for interest and how much for sinking fund, and they could not tell me; but under the amendment which I offer all of the amount necessary is appropriated, and then the Secretary of the Treasury can figure out how much for interest and how much for sinking fund.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the amendment, and it is in the exact language of the statute. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Such being the case, I move to strike out the last word, and I now ask the committee to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], because if his amendment does not change the law, and the item carried in the bill being couched in proper appropriating language, there is no necessity whatever to encumber it by engrafting this long amendment into it. If we were to follow that practice with reference to every other item carrying into effect acts of Congress, it would make a bill 18 times as long as the bill now laid before you for consideration.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would take 18 times as long to pass the District of Columbia appropriation bill as it has taken to pass this one.

Mr. BURLESON. I hope not, but it would probably take a much longer time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the status of the situation and the ruling of the Chair, there is authority for the payment of the interest on the funded debt and there is also authority for the payment of a proportion of the funded debt-on the part of the Government of the United States, this proportion being one-half.

This being so, why should we not carry one item in the bill, setting aside a specific amount in the aggregate for the two purposes of sinking fund, and interest thus continually advising and apprising the House thereby in each bill of the amount to be expended on the above accounts? Why should we turn over Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If I may be pardoned, con-ceding for the sake of argument that the Chair is right that amounts necessary for the interest, and sinking fund? Why should this House not be apprised when it acts upon this bill of the amount required for this compound purpose?

It is perfectly apparent, Mr. Chairman, that there can be no confusion arising from carrying the appropriation, in the present form. The amount necessary for the interest is easy to be ascertained. It is the amount necessary to pay the interest on the present outstanding obligations. An account kept of the progress of liquidation of these obligations, so that there is no difficulty in ascertaining at any time the precise amount for discharging the outstanding interest.

The amount that will be used by the sinking fund is dependent, of course, to some extent on the premium paid on the bonds that will be purchased in that connection. An account is kept from time to time, and the amounts used for sinking fund, and interest, are yearly ascertained. This information is easily secured, since it is in the form of written reports.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SAUNDERS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire the opinion of the gentleman as to whether he regards an appropriation to be an appropriation unless it is for a specific sum.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is exactly why we carry a definite sum for the sinking fund and interest.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the committee ascertain what amount was required for the sinking fund and what amount was required for interest?

Mr. BURLESON.. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations verified the amount and ascertained that it was mathematically correct. We desire to carry that sum in the bill rather than to leave to another functionary the authority to expend an indefinite sum.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will say that the precise amount carried, is the amount that is needed, according to the information before us, to liquidate accruing interest, and provide the necessary part now required for the ultimate extinguishment of the

Mr. FOWLER. Did that information come from the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The estimates always come from the Secretary of the Treasury. The commissioners make them, and forward them to the Secretary. They are returned by the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman regard the method set up by this amendment to be an appropriation at all?

Mr. SAUNDERS. As I understand it, it is authority for the application by the Secretary of the Treasury of the necessary amount for the discharge of the interest, and the proper proportionate part of the sinking fund.

Mr. FOWLER. Without making an appropriation for a spe-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know whether the gentleman's amendment proposes to strike out the specific sum carried in our bill for sinking fund, and interest. If this item is not to be stricken out, then there is no occasion for the amendment; if it is to be stricken out, then there is a greater reason why the amendment should not be written into the present law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-four Members are present-not a quorum. Under the rule the Clerk will proceed to call the roll, and those present will answer "Present."

The Clerk called the roll.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 240 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he reported the following absentees:

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe, under the rule, that I have five minutes within which to discuss the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be heard for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we have now under consideration, on page 73 of the bill, an amendment offered by me to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8. Those lines read as follows:

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Mr. Chairman, the law provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of the funds of the United States Government, advance the interest on these 3.65 bonds as it falls due. There is another provision of the law which creates a sinking fund. The law says, in substance, that that sinking fund shall be made up of such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, which, with the interest thereon, will be sufficient to pay these bonds when they mature. Now, instead of following that law the Committee on Appropriations has brought in those three lines to which I object and which I wish to have stricken out, which are in substance this: That instead of permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to use, for the payment and interest on these bonds, such a sum of money as will pay the interest on these bonds and, in addition to that, permit the Secretary of the Treasury to set aside so much money as will with the interest thereon retire these bonds when they are due—instead of that, the Appropriations Committee has set aside a specific sum with which to pay the interest and with which to retire these bonds when due. Now, I wish to be clearly understood that I admit that, under the existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury must set aside such a sum of money as will pay this interest; and, in addition to that, he must set aside such a sum of money as will pay this interest and, in addition to that, he must set aside such a sum of money, together with the interest thereof, with which these bonds must be paid. I wish it more clearly still understood again that I seek in nowise to prevent either the payment of interest or to divert any money from the sinking fund which goes toward retiring those bonds when due; but what I do ask is this: That this committee do not attempt to name the exact sum of money which will pay the interest and retire these bonds, because I say they do not know, and they have, by failing to reply to my challenge of several days ago, shown that they do not know, and I assert they do not know. If they do not know, and they do not, it is just as easy for them to appropriate too small a sum to meet this interest and sinking fund as it is to appropriate too large a sum to meet these items. Now, there was injected into the debate but a moment ago the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury had approved this amount, because he has transmitted this estimate to this Congress. I said more than a week ago to this House, I then challenged anybody to controvert me upon that, that the Secretary of the Treasury has not sent an estimate to this House. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia made out an estimate. They sent that estimate to the Secretary of the Treasury for his approval. Without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing t" he sent that back here, and when he sent it back he did not send it back with his approval. He neither approved it nor disapproved it, but in transmitting it he sends it with the statement on the first page of the estimates that he sends it back only for the information of the House. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the only question is, Shall this Appropriations Committee set aside a specific sum to pay the interest and the sinking fund when I say they do not know how much that is, when at the same time, as I have just said, that amount may be too small or too large? It should be as the laws says it shall bethat the Secretary of the Treasury himself shall determine how much each of those amounts is, and then pay it, and for that purpose I offered an amendment, not in my own language, but I have copied the statute. Against my amendment, which is nothing more and nothing less than a copy of the statute upon this subject, a point of order was made. The Chairman overruled the point of order and has said that this House can vote upon the proposition whether or not this committee, which does not know the amount, shall set aside a specific amount, either too large or too small, with which to pay the interest and sinking fund that is required by law.

All I now ask is that the old law, without which they would have no sinking fund, without which they could not appropriate for the interest, be carried out to the letter in this bill, and that instead of permitting the committee to fix the amount which shall be paid as interest and retire these bonds, that the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with the law that is in his hands, shall set aside such an amount as is sufficient, too large nor too small-because I admit that the United States Government should see that this is paid, and I want it paid-but I want the Secretary of the Treasury, in whose hands this law for execution has been placed, to say how much money shall be set apart for the payment of these two items, and now, without the scratch of a pen, he has that So, to make it clear, I simply ask that the law upon the statute books be repeated in this act to-day, and that the Secretary of the Treasury administer that law just as it is found in the statute books and just as it is found in this amendment which I have offered, which amendment is nothing more or less than an exact copy of the law on the statute books.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will repeat what I stated a moment ago when there was a very much smaller number of the committee present. The Committee on Appropriations in proper, succinct, appropriating language has embodied in this bill an item for the interest and sinking fund of the bonded indebtedness of the District of Columbia. The Chair has held that the item as framed is authorized by law. We now insist that this item as framed is much better than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, for, as I understand, it has always been the policy of the Appropriations Committee to appropriate a specific sum for a purpose when that sum can be definitely ascertained, rather than carry an appropriation for an indefinite sum for the accomplishment of the same

We further insist that it is wholly unnecessary to encumber the bill by setting forth in their entirety the two or three acts of Congress referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and I ask that the committee vote down his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question, simply for information. I have not heard very much of this discussion. Do I understand that appropriations have been made in previous District appropriation bills for the sinking fund and interest?

Mr. BURLESON. Since 1879.

Mr. PALMER. In a specific amount? Mr. BURLESON. Varying from time to time as the necessities of the existing situation demanded.

Mr. PALMER. Have these appropriations by Congress been the exact sum which was used by the Treasury Department to meet the sinking fund and interest?

Mr. BURLESON. The authorities have always utilized the amount appropriated for such purpose.

Mr. PALMER. But what I am getting at is was the objection that was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, that there is no way of telling whether this amount would be too large or too small? What has been the practice in the Treasury Department?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, during the preparation of the bill and for the purposes of this particular bill, made the calculation to ascertain to a mathematical certainty that the amount carried in the bill is the requisite amount required.

Mr. PALMER. I assume that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations made the calculations in past years also. What I want to know is, were those calculations correct?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think there has been any error in the amount that was appropriated for this purpose in years past or the amount sought to be appropriated now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas does not mean that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations made the original calculations?

Mr. BURLESON. No. The original calculation was made by officials of the Treasury Department. We had the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations verify the accuracy of those figures and he states to me he did make the calculation and that the bill carries the proper amount. Mr. PALMER. All I want is to clear my mind of a doubt raised by the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], who says there is not anything before the committee that makes it possible to say exactly what sum would be necessary for sinking fund and interest. As I understand, the practice of the House has been to make these appropriations in the past in a specific sum. I want to know whether in the past the sums which have been appropriated turned out to be the exact sums which were necessary to be taken out of the Treasury to meet this requirement. That is all.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no knowledge that there has ever been an unexpended balance of appropriations made for this purpose, and I will state further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this estimate came to the Appropriation Committee through the usual channels, as directed by law, but because of the issue raised, out of double precaution, we had the efficient clerk of your committee make the calculation this time, and he made it with the result I have indicated.

Mr. PALMER. I understand; but the argument presented by the gentleman from Kentucky raises a pretty serious question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me for one minute?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that I believe I know to a positive certainty that not a single one of these appropriations which have been made has ever fitted the exact amount. I believe that one item alone has, during the run of years, exceeded the amount more than three-quarters of a million dollars.

Mr. PALMER. That ought to be a very easy matter to determine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If my amendment is adopted, which is nothing more or less than the statute, then the Secretary of the Treasury ascertains the amount himself and pays it, instead of having fixed here an amount which you do not know and which I do not know is correct.

Mr. PALMER. Has the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to the Congress or to the Committee on Appropriations any statement of the past expenditures under this item which show the appropriation to have jibed with the actual money set

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think I can, too. It was addressed to me.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will wait, then, until the gentleman answers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The reports, I contend, made by the Treasurer of the United States show exactly what I say; and a report later on will be made showing to be true exactly what I say.

Again I insist that I want this interest and sinking fund paid, and I want it done just as the law says shall be done, that the Secretary of the Treasury must himself ascertain the amount and take the responsibility for the ascertainment of that amount, and not have people like us, who do not know, fix the amount for him.

Mr. PALMER. I, too, want the interest and sinking fund paid. I am with the gentleman from Kentucky on that propo-I think, if it is possible to ascertain the amount accurately, the amount ought to be named in the appropriation bill.

What I am trying to get at is whether that is possible or not.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] has asked me a question. I will yield to him first.
Mr. COX of Ohio. The gentleman concedes that the accounting officer in this transaction is the Treasurer of the United States, is he not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The contention that the gentleman from Kentucky is making before this committee-I would not want to call it an insinuation, although it amounts practically to that—is that there has been too much money appropriated. Is it not strange that, despite the very exhaustive study which the gentleman has made of this subject, he is not in possession of tangible facts upon which to base his insinuation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will answer the gentleman in this way: That I wish to disavow any sort of insinuation against the Treasurer of the United States. On the contrary, I wish that the Treasurer of the United States, acting under the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, shall ascertain this amount and that he shall not have it sent down to him already ascertained by Congress. That is my contention.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In just one minute. I hear it stated by a gentleman near me that the Treasurer has fixed it. I challenged them 10 days ago to produce the place where he has fixed it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. If he is the sinking-fund officer, it is fair to assume that he has fixed it; and we challenge the gentleman from Kentucky to show that he has not correctly stated the figures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I say that the Secretary of the Treasury, in transmitting this report, does not approve it, but says in transmitting it to Congress has neither approved nor disapproved it, but sends it to Congress for information

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PALMER. I was not aware that I had control of any time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would be very glad, Mr. Chairman, to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper]. I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have not heretofore during the consideration of this bill made a motion to limit debate, but I am anxious to bring to an end its consideration, and now ask unanimous consent that the debate on this proposition be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Make it 15 minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] desire any time?

Mr. CANNON. No; I think not. Mr. BURLESON. Then, I ask that all debate be concluded in 10 minutes; 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] and 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment be closed in 10 minutes, and that one-half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] and one-half by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunpers] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understand I have the conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion has been made that the Secretary of the Treasury has not approved the estimates that he sent to us this year. Well, he is not required as a matter of necessity to formally approve the estimates. They are sent to him for approval, or disapproval. If there are special items that he disapproves, he can submit to the committee on the return of the estimates a formal disapprobation. But the estimates are sent to the Secretary, in the very language of the act, for approval or disapproval. he returns them to the committee without any expression of attitude, this nonaction may be fairly taken as tantamount to approbation of the items included in the estimates. It may be properly assumed that if he was opposed to any one, or more of the items, he would give expression to that opposition.

Mr. PALMER. Is there any difference in the manner in which the Secretary has sent down the estimates for this particular item in this appropriation bill and the manner in which it has been sent to us in the past?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not specifically answer that question. So far as I am informed, I answer no. It may be that heretofore he may, at some time have singled out special items for commendation, or disapprobation, but if he sends to the Committee on Appropriations a body of estimates which he is required to examine, and sends them without comment, that omission does not affect in the slightest degree the validity of our action.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him, if this amendment goes on, will it hurt or affect the appropriation or reduce it in any manner whatever?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It changes the present method of appropriation, so that the House will be no longer advised by the terms of the bill of the specific amount appropriated for the particular purpose of interest and sinking fund. I maintain that the House ought to have that information, and ought to continue the appropriation in the present form.

Mr. SIMS. But the appropriation itself is not specific.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is specific. Mr. SIMS. It is for sinking fund and interest.

Mr. BURLESON. Last year there was $39.10 of this fund uninvested.

Mr. SAUNDERS. When any gentleman asks the committee what is the amount needed for interest, and what the amount needed for sinking fund, we are not able on the moment to give the exact amount of the segregated portions, but that does not mean that the information is not within easy reach. If any Member of the House insists upon knowing how much of the amount appropriated is interest, and how much is sinking fund, the exact proportion of each can be readily calculated from existing figures.

Mr. SIMS. That is not specific enough.
Mr. SAUNDERS. We know the amount of outstanding We know therefore the amount needed for interest on those bonds.

Mr. SIMS. But the House does not know.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is one feature of the sinking-fund law which makes it impossible to determine in advance the precise amount that will be used out of the amount required for the sinking fund, after the payment of interest. The outstanding bonds may be purchased above par, when it is conceived to be to the interest of the District to make such purchases. It is impossible to determine when the appropriation is made, what amount will be precisely required, since the price of the bonds fluctuate, and they may be purchased on more favorable terms than are anticipated or needed for interest. But every appropriation is for interest, and sinking fund is thereafter settled. The last settlement of this fund shows that about $39 of the amount appropriated for sinking fund, and interest was not used. This amount of $39 therefore lapsed, and went back into the Treasury. Is there any reasonable likelihood of fraud in such a situation as I have presented?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman approve the idea of allowing the Secretary to exercise his own discretion?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is exactly what this amendment would do. It would remit the payments on interest, and the sinking fund to the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SIMS. I mean, does the gentleman approve of the idea of allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds at his own discretion?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is the present law. How are we concerned with that?

Mr. SIMS. It ought to be repealed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then repeal it. But let us deal with what is before us. You may have aided in the past in giving him that discretion.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think I have. I never voted in favor

Mr. SAUNDERS. The House at any rate has given him the power to purchase bonds above par. Permit me to call attention to the figures. Under the last item, for sinking fund and interest precisely like the one in the present bill, bonds were retired amounting to $622,050. They cost $674,287, and the unexpended portion of the amount for sinking fund was $39.10. This amount lapsed. It was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury when the estimates with respect to this specific item for the sinking fund and interest, were submitted to him, if he had any reason to believe that there was any error in them, to apprise the Committee on Appropriations to that effect. The estimates submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, contained the following specific item for this purpose: "Interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,pose: 408." The item was returned without any comment by the Secretary.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, if I have the time. Mr. CANNON. That is the official estimate that is transmitted under the law?

Yes, to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. SAUNDERS.

and returned by him to us.

Mr. CANNON. And this bill carries the amount of money on its face necessary?

Mr. SAUNDERS. For both purposes, sinking fund and interest.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is adopted, then this bill does not carry on its face the amount that it will require, but is a blind appropriation of nearly a million dollars.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Secretary of the Treasury would pay out the amount necessary; we would not know what that amount would be inasmuch as we would not carry it in our

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SAUNDERS. My time has expired; otherwise I would yield with pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, under the act of 1878 the law says:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall carefully consider the estimates submitted to him as above provided, and shall approve, disapprove, or suggest such changes as he may see fit.

Now, then, that law does not pertain to any other appropriation bill which comes before Congress, but is the law applicable to this bill.

The point has been made that the House can not be advised if my amendment is put on the statute book. The Secretary of the Treasury makes his annual report to Congress, which shows the amount. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] says it would be a "blind appropriation." The law for which the gentleman himself voted authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to "blindly" take from the Treasury so much money as was necessary to pay this interest and sinking fund. Now, it is too late for the graph can be for the graph can be says that too late for the gentleman from Illinois to come and say that if we put into this bill the very act for which he voted—I say it is too late for him to brand it as "a blind appropriation."

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, the law provides for a sinking fund. This appropriates the money to meet that law and states it on its face.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that my amendment appropriates the money to pay this interest.

Mr. CANNON. Without stating the amount.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It leaves the amount to the Secretary of the Treasury to determine each year, because the amount of the bonds differ every week in the year.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will pardon me, this would be in order: There is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise expended, one thousand million dollars to be expended under law by the President of the United States. That would do away with all necessity for considering bills in detail.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois would have supported, as he did, such a measure as he now describes. This work having been properly done by the Secretary of the Treasury, I am more than willing to take his judgment, as did the gentleman from Illinois when he voted on this proposition years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my amendment does nothing except this-instead of fixing a certain sum in this bill above which the Secretary of the Treasury shall not go, and below which the Secretary of the Treasury shall not go, in doing justice to the men who hold these bonds, my amendment leaves it open that he may ascertain the amount and pay them dollar for dollar.
Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.
Mr. COX of Ohio. With reference to the gentleman's statement that there may be some likelihood of an erroneous certification, I want to ask this question: The bonds run for 50 years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; due in 1924.
Mr. COX of Ohio. Was not this plan adopted, that they would pay off each year one-fiftieth of the original debt?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There was nothing adopted by Mr. COX of Ohio. Well, it was the custom.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I am protesting now because of that custom. There was no sinking fund for the 3.65 bonds until five years after the bonds were authorized.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The law provides that they shall pay off the debt in such a way as to reduce the entire bonded debt at its maturity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I am offering the law to you and you refuse to take it. It is the statute doing that which I now offer, and it is that against which the gentleman

Mr. COX of Ohio. In the face of this statement of facts, how can the gentleman successfully contend that there can be any error in the certification when, following the practice of years, we pay one-fiftieth of the debt, plus the interest? There is no possibility—not even a remote one—of there being any error in the certification.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, if there is not, why not follow the law as it is on the statute books?

Mr. COX of Ohio. This is the legal effect of the statute-a compliance with the statute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But I say not.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not also true that if there is any error in the certification of the amount necessary to the Committee on Appropriations, or if there is any failure to comply with the law in the approval of the estimate, that that error and that failure is made by the same official of the Government of whom the gentleman from Kentucky now proposes to intrust the power to not only pay but to make the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not propose to intrust it to him. The law already intrusts it to him. But I say this: If this amount falls short, then it requires another act to provide an amount sufficient to pay this interest and sinking fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and, pending the announcement of the result, Mr. Johnson of Kentucky demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky demands tellers. All those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and Six gentlemen have [After counting.] stand until counted. risen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk and which was put over by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the paragraph on page 56 was passed for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from Maryland to prepare an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. Without objection, the committee will return to that amendment. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be first reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who, during such tutelage, do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the District of Columbia in excess of such estimated cost of tuition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment to the amendment just reported, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"Provided, however, That when a pupil or parent of a pupil is assessed upon property and pays the taxes thereon, which annual payment is less than the estimated cost of tuition, then the said payment so made for the year preceding shall be credited upon the bill for tuition for the current year."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order upon that amendment in order that the amendment might be perfected. I shall withdraw the point of order, although I doubt whether the amendment has been perfected to accomplish the purpose desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the pending amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, pending that I have a parliamentary inquiry to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. I wish to oppose the entire amendment as it has been perfected, and I want to know whether we will lose our right by having this substitute reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not lose his rights by the substitute. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Pupils shall not be admitted to or taught free of charge in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils: Provided, That any other nonresident pupil may be admitted to and taught in said public schools on the payment of such amount, to be fixed by the board of education, with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition and cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupil; and all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the substitute

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order against the substitute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the point of order?

Mr. CARLIN. The point of order is that this substitute is not germane to the legislation which the amendment has been held to be, and that it is new legislation-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call the attention of the Chair-

Mr. CARLIN. And to a paragraph which the Chair has held was not germane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The situation is different at this time than when the Chair ruled on the provision in the original bill. This is offered as a substitute to a pending amendment which is itself legislation, and had the point of order been pressed would have been subject to the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] was obnoxious to the rule because it was a legislative provision; but having been adopted by the committee, the only question to be determined now is whether this amendment is germane. I offered this amendment, Mr. Chairman, in this form because the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland is in effect an attempt to accomplish in a very indirect way what was proposed by the committee originally. I believe that the provision reported by the committee was proper legislation. Gentlemen in the exercise of their rights under the rules made it impossible for the committee to put in the legislative provision, and so they were compelled to take advantage of their rights under the rules and to limit the use of the appropriation. When that had been accomplished those gentlemen who were antagonizing the committee then desired to obtain concessions that would eliminate what they thought would be an unfair operation of the provision so far as those in whom they were interested would be affected, and the result was that with the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland the effect would practically be the same, although the manner in which the provision is worded and framed is not the manner in which it should be in order to permit the proper legislation. So long as with the cooperation of the gentleman from Maryland and his associates the provision which he proposed, subject to the point of order, was not objected to, I assume that so long as this seems to be inevitable they would prefer to have it done in a manner about which there could be no misunderstanding. not believe that there is any question that the provision offered by the gentleman from Maryland was subject to the point of order. That makes any amendment germane in order at this time regardless of what might have been the determination of the Chair upon it as an original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair a

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. Does not the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from New York as a substitute broaden the legislation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to hear the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask if the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York does not broaden the legislation beyond that which is contained in the amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly. If it is a legislative provision it must either narrow or broaden the amendment which is pending now. I have no hesitation in saying that it does broaden the scope of the legislation proposed in the amendment which is offered as a substitute. The rule is well settled that if a provision in an appropriation bill be subject to a point of order and is permitted to remain in the bill without objection, or if an amendment which would be obnoxious to the rule is permitted to be considered without the point of order being interposed, then any amendment germane to the pending amendor pending provision is in order. That, I take it, is the situation here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly concerned as to whether this item goes in the bill or out of the bill, but it seems to me that the point of order made against the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York is a good point of order. In the first place, while I reserved the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, if I understood it correctly, I do not think it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assure the gentleman it was.

Mr. MANN. The original amendment of the gentleman from Texas provided in effect, by negation, that pupils might be admitted to the schools here whose parents paid in taxes the amount of the tuition, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland along that same line, a previous amendment being held in order by the Chair, simply provided that if admitted to the schools here they should only pay the difference between the taxes and the estimated cost of tuition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is clearly a change of existing law. Mr. MANN. Oh, well, it is all a change of existing law, so far as this appropriation is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. Mr. MANN. Why certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. The law provided here that red-headed children may go to the schools, and we may insert a provision in this bill no part of this money shall be appropriated to teach redheaded children.

That would be a change of law so far as this appropriation is concerned, but would not change the statute law. Both provisions change the effect of the law.

As I say, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] was not subject to a point of order and does not bring the substitute within the rule invoked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. But even if it were subject to a point of order, I call to the attention of the Chair that the amendment as it stands is a mere negation of the appropriation, but the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York proposes to insert in positive language that nonresident pupils may be admitted and taught in the schools on the payment of tuition. That is not a germane amendment to a proposition limiting the appropriation, nor is the provision in this amendment that the amount paid for tuition shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District, a germane amendment to the original proposition, which was merely negativing the use of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] as a substitute for the amendment is in precise language the amendment which has heretofore been ruled out by the Chair. It is insisted, however, that the parliamentary situation has changed, and that by virtue of certain legislation having come in in the way of a limitation upon an appropriation, then an amendment which was probably subject to the point of order having been added to that, therefore it is now in order to bring in this original proposition, which has been two or three times removed from the bill on a point of order, and offer it as a germane substitute.

The Chair finds this in Hinds' Precedents:

In an appropriation bill a paragraph embodying legislation may be perfected by a germane amendment, but this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation.

And, after stating the case, there is this reasoning of the Chair, Mr. THEODORE E. BURTON, of Ohio, being the Chairman:

The Chair, though somewhat doubtful, thinks this the best rule: That if a paragraph has been included in the bill which has in it a taint of illegality or of being contrary to existing law, that paragraph can be corrected or perfected by an amendment; but if the further paragraph which is proposed as an amendment carries a further degree of illegality affecting the whole paragraph as amended, then it is not in order. not in order

Concededly, the amendment proposed by way of a substitute by the gentleman from New York does broaden the legislation and extends it beyond the scope included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum], and to that extent carries what Mr. Burton described as "a further degree of illegality." The Chair thinks the reasoning sound. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order, and sustains the point of order.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], as amended.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Car-LIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, we now have finally reached the material question involved, and I do not want anything I shall say to be a criticism of the ruling of the Chair. The Chair has ruled this is not new legislation, but I am compelled, in appealing to this committee to defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, to point out to the committee the fact that the amendment as now pending does change in effect the present existing statutes.

The law relating to the admission of nonresident pupils to the schools of the District of Columbia, as it exists to-day, simply provides that they shall be taxpayers in the District of Columbia. The amendment pending provides that they shall not only pay taxes in the District of Columbia, but to pay taxes in excess of an estimated tuition. In other words, it affects the amount of taxes they are to pay. And then, reduced to its last analysis, it simply means if you own $2,500 worth of property in the District of Columbia and your tax bill amounts to $40 a year, you are eligible to admission to the schools, wherever you may live. But if you only own $1,000 worth of property in the District of Columbia you are not eligible to admission to the schools. So, after all, the only question this committee has to determine as to whether it will sustain this amendment or not is the one whether it will exclude the children of the parent who does not own $2,500 worth of property, but who may own $2,400 worth of property.

If you are a man of means, though you be a nonresident, the schools are open to your children, because of this difference in taxation which you may pay; but if you are a person of small means and own only a small amount of property in the District of Columbia, the schools are closed to your children. That is the policy which this committee insists upon, and says it insists upon it because it is the policy of the committee. They have adopted this principle as a policy and are pursuing it, and have pursued it, here for days, because they say it is a policy. It is to that policy to which I propose to pay my attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be allowed 10

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been thoroughly discussed. I think I have been considerate, and-

Mr. MANN. Its merits have not been discussed. Mr. CARLIN. We have not discussed it on its merits at all. Mr. BURLESON. How much time does the gentleman from Virginia desire?

Mr. CARLIN. I think I can conclude in 10 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be ended in 15 minutes, and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] be given 10 of it and that I be given 5.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5

Mr. BURLESON. Then I will make it 15 minutes, and agree that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] shall be given 5 minutes.

Mr. MANN. We may desire time on this side. Mr. BURLESON. Then I will make it 20 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] wants 10 minutes himself.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this amendment be concluded in 25 minutes; that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] be given 10 minutes, that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] be given 5 minutes, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor] be given 5 minutes, and that I be given 5 minutes.

Mr. MANN. There are other gentlemen who want time on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I think we ought to have more time on this side. I think there are gentlemen on this side who

Mr. BURLESON. I will give the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] 9 minutes and for my time I will take only 1 minute.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I think gentlemen on this side of the House should have time enough.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate close in 25 minutes.

The gentleman from Texas moves that the The CHAIRMAN. debate on this amendment be closed in 25 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Austin) there were—ayes 25, noes 9.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate will close in 25 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to state that it will be necessary for me to insist on more than five minutes for the minority side. I am quite of the opinion that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] should have his 10 minutes undiminished.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no dispute as to the distribution of time under the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I understand that; otherwise I would be compelled to insist upon the strict enforcement of the five-minute rule. If there can be a fair agreement as to the distribution of time, I shall be willing to listen to the gentleman from Texas

Mr. BURLESON. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] shall have 10 minutes, that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] shall have 5 minutes, and that gentlemen on the other side shall have 9 minutes. All I shall want is 1 minute in which to make a short statement.

I think that is a fair arrangement. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CARLIN. This is insisted upon by the Committee on Appropriations as a matter of policy. It is to that policy that had hoped, when this District bill was brought into the House, that it would have something in it that we could call a policy of progress and improvement, instead of a policy of standstill and do nothing, which is the policy which speaks from every page in this bill.

I desire to enter my protest.

There is not a line here giving to this great city a public park, a new school building, or a new public improvement. The whole policy of the bill seems to be to stand still and mark time, and that is a policy to which I object. A great city like this, growing as it is in wealth and importance, is entitled to more consideration in the way of public improvements than are provided for in this bill. And in my judgment this amendment is the last straw upon the camel's back, when it insists that any nonresident, whoever he may be, may, if he owns $2,500 worth of real estate, send his children to the schools of the District of Columbia, but if he only owns $1,200 worth of real estate his children shall be excluded from the schools. That is the point I want to make clear to this House. If it was a provision excluding nonresidents, then there might be some ground for argument, but it does not exclude nonresidents. It specifically admits them. It admits the nonresident if he is rich, refuses to admit the nonresident who is poor. That, briefly speaking, is the whole thing in a nutshell. How many children does it affect? The Committee on Appropriations has told us that there are 1,600 empty seats in the schools of Washington, 1,600 more seats than are needed to accommodate the present pupils of the District of Columbia. They tell you that it will not require the expenditure of one single dollar to let the law remain as it is to-day, and that is the only thing I contend for. I ask that by defeating this amendment you allow the present law upon the statute book to remain. It has been found to be wise. It has worked out well. It has been found to be just, discriminating against no one, rich or poor, to permit every taxpayer in the District of Columbia to send his children to the schools here if he desires to do so. This amendment makes an unjust discrimination. In my opinion it ought not to prevail, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the Committee of the Whole to vote it down.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, Mr. Lewis, whose district covers that part of Maryland west of Washington, is now absent with a delegation of this House in Florida. As secretary of the Maryland delegation, and at his request, I am asking a few moments of this committee's time to make a statement in his behalf.

It seems to me that we have the cart before the horse on this proposition. People are going all through the country preaching the doctrine "back to the farm." We hear them saying that it is the salvation of the poor man to leave the city and go into the country, where he can live more cheaply, where he can breathe the pure air and enjoy God's sunshine, instead of living in tunnels as we do in the city. We hear all this, and yet the moment a poor man goes out of the District of Colum-We hear all this, and bia upon the lands of Maryland, the moment he leaves the District of Columbia, already crowded, whose land is so high that it is almost impossible for him to obtain a piece of it, as soon as he leaves the limits of this District and goes into the State of Maryland, where he can possibly rent some little house for $6 or $7 or $8 a month, that moment you propose to tell him that his children must be taxed for the privilege of attending the schools of this District, whereas his neighbor, living in a $10,000 house on the hill above him in the same county, who is also a taxpayer to the District, is not taxed to send his children to the schools of Washington, because God has given him riches which he has not given to the man working upon the streets or in some factory, or standing in a grocery store, or in some other business which pays him but a small remuneration for his work.

To the man who comes here from the South, from the North, or the West, able to get a Government position, you say, "Live where you please. Send your children to the schools of Washington and enjoy them and we will pay for it."

I say you have got the cart before the horse. You are taxing the poor man, while you are letting off the man who is rich enough not to mind it, because he is paying taxes here anyhow.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter which does not affect the District of Columbia to any great or appreciable extent, because the additional burden imposed upon the people of the District of Columbia is very slight. But these United States, of which these people are citizens, but in which they hold no office, and some of them ask for none, pay one-half of the expenses of these

While some may say that the people living in the territory about the District of Columbia would be entitled to slight consideration for the amount paid, yet it is a fact that they are citizens of this country, believe in this country of ours, and this country is paying one-half of the taxes of the District of Co-I therefore see no reason why they should not directly enjoy some of the blessings of this Government, and I know of no blessing this Government can bestow greater than the education of their children.

I ask this committee on behalf of these people and on behalf of fair play between children of the rich and the children of the poor to vote down this amendment. We have got along for years under the present existing law and the people have enjoyed it. The cars have carried them out to the suburbs, where they have small homes, where they live and enjoy the healthful surroundings of country life. They can not ride back and forth in automobiles. If they could, their children would be admissible to the schools under this amendment, because they would have property.

I say in all earnestness that we should help these people. The people of the District of Columbia have enjoyed the parks of Maryland and Virginia, the wild flowers, and the pure air for more than 100 years without paying a penny of taxes to either of these States. Shall we now at this late day begin to tax the people of Maryland and Virginia for their children's attendance in the schools of the District of Columbia? I hope not. I believe it would be a serious mistake.

I regret to oppose the Committee on Appropriations, but I hope that this committee will see its way clear to vote down this amendment and maintain these people in the enjoyment of a privilege which it should be a pleasure for this Government to bestow.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, imperfect as it may be, the publicschool system of America is the pride of every American citizen. It will be the last refuge, the last spring from [Applause.] which shall flow the streams that purify, morally and intellectually, the masses of our people when government and law and order and all that is sacred to this Republic shall be assailed.

The public-school system is, for all practical purposes, so far as I am acquainted with it in the West, a free system. own city has never drawn the line on poor children that live outside of its borders, and I think generally among broadminded people, who comprehend the necessity and the blessing of the public-school system, no one has ever attempted to split hairs in regard to it; and it seems to me a reproach that in the American Congress the privilege of a child shall be measured by the amount of wealth that his parents possess. [Ap-

It ought to stand as a reproach to the great Congress of the United States that we spend hours and days here in a quibble over a little matter of tuition of the pupils of the poor, whose fathers are toiling from morning to night, and whose mothers are toiling from morning to night, to give their children the opportunities which our institutions are designed to give.

It is a materialistic age after all, and in the last analysis we are prone to measure everything by dollars and cents. Soul, character, all that makes for the strength of American manhood and womanhood, must be subjected to the test of dollars and cents. Tuition in the public schools! Away with this quibble. I am against this amendment; I am for free schools to children of the poor as well as of the rich in the city of Washington. [Applause.]

I congratulate this great Appropriations Committee on the wisdom, the ability, and ingenuity of their work, but they have in two or three things concerning the public schools in this city taken a course which I think is a mistake of far-reaching importance. It is economy in name but profligacy and ultimate ruin to the American people to pursue such a policy. I am against this amendment, and all amendments that restrict the rights of the children to the public schools in the city of Washington. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TRIBBLE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1650) to amend section 110 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13041) to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Co-lumbia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. POMERENE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2973. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911; and

H. R. 11321. An act to authorize the Twin City & Lake Superior Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River between Chisago County, Minn., and Polk County, Wis. The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. Clarke of Arkansas and Mr. Burnham members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of the Interior.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. Mann. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how I would vote on a proposition to require all pupils outside of the District coming into the District schools to pay tuition fees, but I fail to understand the distinction in drawing the line between those living outside of the District who have wealth and those living outside of the District who have not wealth, and in drawing the line between those living inside of the District who have wealth and those who have not, so far as the attendance on the public schools is concerned. I would not have it said that the Congress of the United States, the great deliberative body of the country, should give encouragement in any way to the idea that the attendance upon the public schools of the country depends upon the parents' ability to own property or pay taxes, because, for sooth, those who have the least property often have the most children, and they are the support of the public in the way of schools. Wealthy parents support of the public in the way of schools. The poor parents depend upon the public schools. I hope the line will never be drawn by Congress, so far as the attendance of children upon public schools is concerned, as between those whose parents pay taxes and those whose parents do not pay taxes but who wish they could. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used seven minutes of his time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in my desire that the children of the poor in this country should have every opportunity to obtain the same education as the children of the wealthy might receive, but gentlemen misunderstand the object and purpose of this amendment. This is simply an effort to provide that each community shall pay for the education of its own children. That is all there is to this amendment, and that is what we compel each community to do in my own State. Those outside of a city or town do not ask that their children shall come in free to the schools of that city or town. The outside communities are ready, if necessary, to pay the expense of having their children attend school within the city, if they should be so poor as to be unable to pay tuition; but this amendment is really and actually, as I understand it, to enable these wealthy people who have elegant residences outside of the District, in Chevy Chase, to send their children to the public schools of Washington, because they will not tax them-selves for the support and maintenance of schools in their own community. It is said here that this is against the interest of the poor man. The poorest laborer in the city of Washington the poor man. The poorest laborer in the city of Washington can have his children sent to the public schools, and the poor man who lives in this town and who is not in the employ of the Government invariably becomes a resident. It is only the wealthy gentlemen who have residences back in some other State who do not become residents here. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, by no process of sophistical reasoning can the pending amendment be distorted into an attack upon the free-school system, which is, as so eloquently said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nys], "the pride of all the American people." By no sort of misrepresentation of the facts can this amendment be construed so as to operate as a discrimination against the poor and in favor of the rich. The simple proposition confronting this committee for decision is, Shall the people of Maryland and Virginia tax themselves for the education of their own children, or will you take advantage of a power that rests with you to shoulder the burden which honesty requires they should carry upon the help-less people of the District of Columbia? Mr. Chairman, we have a law now upon the statute books relating to the subject matter sought to be dealt with by this amendment which, if fairly construed and properly enforced, would exclude the children of school age of certain people living without the District in Chevy Chase, Takoma, and Alexandria from sending their children to the public schools of the city of Washington; but by some of these people of Virginia and Maryland that law has been shamefully avoided. A dozen or more of them, by combining together and purchasing a small piece of property, aggregating in value only $50 in one case brought to our attention by a member of the school board, they practice a palpable fraud upon the authorities by forcing their children in the schools of the District. By availing themselves of the plea that they are taxpayers of the District, they claim that under existing law they are entitled to send their children to the public schools of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding such attendance operates to exclude from those schools children of the poor who are justly entitled under the law to privileges of those schools.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. And they were not poor men, either. Mr. BURLESON. No, indeed; they are not all poor men. As was well said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green], the real beneficiaries of the system contended for by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] are those who are well able to pay the tuition of their children in the public schools but who seek to avoid it by evading the law, even if it takes the perpetration of a fraud to accomplish their end. Gentlemen, you can not possi-bly escape this conclusion if the facts which have been made known to you are fairly considered. The attendance of these nonresident pupils in the District schools was brought to the attention of your committee during the hearings on the bill. It was our duty to take action on the matter. We did so. Since then the newspapers state that resolutions have been adopted by citizens' associations asserting that their children were being excluded from the schools by reason of this unjustifiable and indefensible condition. We thought it was our duty to correct that condition if it was possible to do so. We placed in this bill a provision, broad and liberal-more liberal, in fact, in its terms than the provision now carried in the amendment I have offered, offered in its narrow and restricted form because of the objections made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]-and I do not know how the gentleman [Mr. Carlin] can square himself with his constitutents when he is confronted with the charge that the House Committee on Appropriations reported the bill carrying a provision that was broad and liberal, but which, because of his tactics of obstruction, the committee was compelled, in order to accomplish its purpose, to so narrow as to now exclude many children from Virginia that otherwise would be permitted to attend the District public schools.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, the determination of this issue rests with you. Do you propose to saddle upon the District of Columbia the burden of educating these nonresident children or will you say to the people of Maryland, "You must provide for the education of your own children"; and to the people of Virginia, "You must bear this burden which is properly yours and roughly to the burden which is properly yours and roughly to the burden which is properly yours and roughly to the burden which is properly yours. erly yours, and you shall not shirk it by imposing it on others." That is the issue pure and simple, and I ask this committee to meet it fairly and to decide it justly by adopting this amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I consumed all of my time

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did consume five minutes

Mr. CARLIN. I did not reserve it, but with the consent of the House

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Mr. CARLIN. Just hear me and perhaps you will not. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] wanted two minutes and I wanted to give that much time to him.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. regular order is a vote upon the amendment. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas,

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 23. Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve gentlemen are present, a quorum. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The next point of order pending is to the paragraph on page 92 of the bill, beginning with line 25, on page 92, and ending with line 7, on page 93. The Chair will ask the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky for a moment. Did the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky apply to the paragraph beginning with line 21 or beginning with line 25?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, Mr. Chairman; It make the point of order after the caption "Militia, District of Columexcept some items on page 93, to which the Record will show I did not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the first point of order—that is, as to the first paragraph, extending down to line 7, page 93-the Chair-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is on that I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair desires to hear the gentleman on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Kentucky to state where his point of order began, and I did not understand-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is page 92, at the bottom of the page.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Whether it commenced with line 21 or line 25.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Line 21.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky stated it The CHAIRMAN. began with line 21.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the Chair desires to hear me, I believe, on line 25, down to line 7, on page 93. The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair understood the gentleman wished to be heard on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are in that clause a large number of items, for which $25,000 is set aside with which to pay them, and I would like to ask the gen-tleman who has the bill in charge whether or not he can tell me in detail how much each one of those items is to cost,

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is utterly impossible for me to give the information asked; the fact is the cost varies one year with another. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that I submitted to the Chair the last day we under consideration, and subsequently all had this bill authority of law within my knowledge for carrying this item in the bill, and I thought we had concluded discussion upon the point of order at that time, and that all that remained was for the Chair to rule upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not discussed it at all. Mr. BURLESON. I do not desire to shut the gentleman off, but I am anxious to get along with the bill, and I thought he had concluded argument on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I have not been heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to say there has been no discussion on the point of order. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Kentucky briefly on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman who has the bill in charge for what use is the item on line 5, "practice ship"?

Mr. BURLESON. As I stated to the gentleman the other day, the navy militia, or District Navy Reserve Corps, is also provided for in this bill, and it has under its control a practice ship which they utilize, also a monitor and certain lanueles, for the care and maintenance of which this item carries an appropriation. I know they have this ship; I was on it myself on one occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if anywhere in here there is any provision made for the transportation of the men from one point to another?

Mr. BURLESON. I see nothing in this item relating to transportation. I mean the item beginning with line 25, on page 92, and extending to line 7, on page 93. It makes no provision for transportation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What do you mean, then, by the item in line 5, containing the word "boats"? What is to be carried on those boats?

Mr. BURLESON. The District Naval Militia has a number of vessels, and this item provides for their care and maintenance—for the support and maintenance not only of the District Naval Militia, but for the militia proper as well. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the law makes no provision for transportation for anything except for baggage, I was inquiring only for information as to whether or not this provided for anything else except for the transportation of baggage.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not intended to cover transportation of baggage or any other character of transportation. It is to cover the care and maintenance of a monitor and two or three launches and a practice ship, and so forth:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in yolume 25, page 778, the law says this, in allowing for expenses for rental or otherwise of a suitable camp and grounds and making necessary provisions thereon for encampment, and so forth:

To provide necessary transportation to and from the same for baggage

No provision is made in the act to expend a cent of money for the transportation of anything except the baggage and supplies.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that all transportation charges for the District Militia are paid out of another fund, carried in another bill,
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Chairman, I certainly am entitled to have this stricken out of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, however, the transportation referred to applies not to the land militia but to the naval militia. What has the gentleman from Kentucky to say about that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it applies to any kind of transportation, because the act itself does not make any distinction. There is no distinction made at all in section 43 of the act, on page 778.

Mr. BURLESON. I believe I submitted to the Chair the other day the act of March 11, 1898, for the organization of the Navy Militia of the District of Columbia.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If there is no transportation permitted for anything except baggage, and they provide transportation in here for militia, that is a different proposition. Then I do not think it out of place at all to say that but a few years ago the auditor refused to pay an item of $600 for a trip down the Potomac to Chesapeake Bay to see a display of naval vessels down there; but ultimately it has been paid,

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman again that this does not seek to provide for transportation, but for repairs, care, and maintenance of "the boats, dredge machinery, and so forth.'

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The United States Government, under the act itself, shall furnish such paraphernalia as they need. The transportation is in the last line, section 43, of the act.

Mr. BURLESON. I am speaking of the item in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not use the word "transportation." They have carefuly avoided it, but they have used the words "vehicles in which the transportation must be made." The gentleman has already said that they meant to provide therein for the transportation of the men. So, if they are providing for the transportation of the men and the law limits the transportation of their baggage, that is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman refer there to boats, practice ships, and so forth?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir. Under one section of this bill everything of that kind which they have the United States Government is to furnish. And instead of this appropriation being on the half-and-half basis, nine-fenths of it, for the militia, is paid by the United States Government.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman this bill provides that one-half of amounts appropriated shall be defrayed by the District government and one-half by the General Govern-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I know that part of it is all right. But when you come to take the bill and see what is furnished you will find that the United States Government furnishes practically everything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair will find in sections

55, 56, and 57 of the act the items that may be paid for—a band of music, storerooms, and all that kind of things.

The CHAIRMAN. The following memorandum has been furnished the Chair by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]. It quotes the statutes, and the Chair will ask the Clerk to

The Clerk read as follows:

MEMOBANDUM.

The following provision has been questioned on the ground that certain items are authorized and certain of them are not authorized:

"For the following, to be expended under the authorized and direction of the commanding general, who is hereby authorized and empowered to make necessary contracts and leases, namely:

"For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery, and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $25,000."

Expenses of camps are specifically provided for on page 43, act of parades, fuel, light, heat, care and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery, and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $25,000."

Expenses of camps are specifically provided for on page 42, act of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat L., 778), as follows:

"That the National Guard shall perform not less than six consecutive days of camp duty in each year, at such time as may be ordered by the commanding general; and the quartermaster general of the militia, subject to the approval of the commanding general, shall provide, by rental or otherwise, a suitable camp ground for the annual encampment of the militia, make the necessary provisions thereon for the encampment, and provide necessary transportation to and from the same for baggage and supplies."

Hire of horses for officers is authorized by section 52 of the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stat L., 634), as follows:

"That whenever the National Guard of the District of Columbia shall be ordered to duty in case of riot, timult, breach of the peace, or whenever called in aid of the civil authorities, all calisted men who do duty shall be paid at the rate equivalent to two times the pay of enlisted men of the Regular Army of like grade. Commissioned officers who do duty shall be entitled to and shall receive the same pay and allowances as commissioned officers of like grade of the Regular Army. Fach mounted officer and enlisted man shall be paid a reasonable per diem compensation for each horse actually furnished and used by him: Pravided. That when the National Guard of the District of Columbia is called into actual service of the United States the officers and enlisted men shall, during their time of service, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by law for the Regular Army.

"Expenses of instruction, practice marches, practice cruises of instruction, practice marches, practice cruises of discipline and field exercises ordered to be observ

Practice craises are to the invarious walls and the land forces.

Fuel, light, and heat. These three items are incident to the maintenance of armories and the care of the vessels issued for the naval buttaflen. It goes without saying that an armory where the men drill af night must be lighted and that it must be heated. It is a fact that on the vessels issued to the Naval Militia It is necessary at all times to keep up a certain amount of steam to prevent enormous damages to the vessels by the freezing of water pipes. An estimate was at one time made that it would cost several hundred thousand dollars to repair the damage which might be caused to the coast-defense monitor issued to the militia by the freezing of the water pipes.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that that statement states the law very fully, and that law when applied to this paragraph shows authority for the appropriation, and the Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I did not eatch it all in the reading of it on account of the noise. I wish to ask whether or not the Chair has ruled that transportation, other than the transportation of baggage and supplies, may be appropriated for?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled on that. The Chair does not think it may be appropriated for, as he understands the law, but he does not understand that this item carries transportation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And it is the opinion of the Chair that if any money is spent for this purpose, it will be an unlawful expenditure?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know of any authority of law for any transportation except the transportation set out in the law.

The next point of order is on the succeeding paragraph, for rent of armories, storehouses, and so forth,

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in view of the opinion just rendered by the Chair, I will withdraw my point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of order. The next point of order is on the paragraph beginning on line 14 and extending through line 15, referring to cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms, and equipments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order on the paragraphs down to line 22, which covers the pay of troops.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order down to the paragraph indicated. The Chair has investigated that paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a short letter read before the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, a short letter sent to the desk will be read.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND INFANTRY,
NATIONAL GUARD DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 25, 1912.

Hon. Albert S. Burleson, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Washington, January 25, 1912.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I observe that a point of order has been raised against the provision in the District appropriation act providing for the pay of troops in the National Guard. Without discussing the technicality of the subject as to whether the general law covers this, I wish to point out these facts:

The maintenance of the National Guard and giving it proper training is becoming more and more difficult each year. In the District of Columbia we have generally required men to perform two weeks of camp duty. Officers and men are entitled under sections 14 and 15 of the act of January 21, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 777), to the same pay and allowances as officers and men of corresponding grades in the Army. The pay of an enlisted man in the Army is very small, a private drawing $15 per month or 50 cents a day. For a man in civil life to leave his business and go out and perform 15 days' hard work in the field and draw $7.50 pay is not a very alluring prospect. Practically all of the States have found it necessary to supplement this Regular Army pay by State appropriations. That is the plan which is being followed in the District—to give men in camp an increased compensation not to exceed $1.25 per day, but scaled down where the men have not performed full duty during the winter drill season. A copy of the regulations governing this matter, issued under the authority of the commanding general of the District Militia, is inclosed.

This is issued under the provision of law contained in the last District appropriation act of March 2, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1004):

"For pay of troops, other than Government employees, to be disbursed under the authority and direction of the commanding general.

This is issued under the provision of law contained in the last District appropriation act of March 2, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1004):

March 2, 1911, Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 4104.

These are annual appropriations. The men have been enlisted into the service with these annual appropriations before them. They expect to get this pay when they enlist. It certainly seems almost like a breach of faith for the District to refuse this pay, which has been regularly paid for the past 10 years.

These young men who are serving in the National Guard are performing a public duty with very little encouragement and practically no compensation. The question has been asked me, I suppose, a hundred times, How can you get them to do it? by people who observe the way they are worked in camp. It certainly can not be questioned that an enlisted man in the National Guard, when he engages in the field maneuvers, earns all and more than is given to him. It is a pennywise and pound-foolish policy which denies to the National Guard a small compensation for the time actually spent in military duty. It is unreasonable to expect a man not only to give his time and his work, but to sacrifice all of his pay while rendering service which is purely patriotic.

I sincerely trust that the injustice will not be done the enlisted men of the National Guard in this District by having the small addition patriotic.

I sincerely trust that the injustice will not be done the enlisted men of the National Guard in this District by having the small addition to their Regular Army pay cut out.

Very respectfully,

Colonel Second Infantry, National Guard District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements contained in that letter, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is no sort of provision in this bill for the pay of these men. In the bill there is a provision that the United States Government shall furnish to them, free of charge, all of their equipment. They are equipped free of all expense to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, but, as I said, the whole equipment is charged to the Federal Government.

Now there are items in the original act, very few in number, participation in which said act commits the United States Government upon the half-and-half basis. It is my opinion that inasmuch as the United States Government pays about 90 per cent of the cost of the District Militia instead of 50 per cent, I therefore insist upon the point of order. But I say further that I have never opposed, and I shall never oppose, the proposition that the District of Columbia may spend her own money just as she chooses to spend it.

I make the point of order to the item in its present form, but if anybody offers an amendment to the effect that the District of Columbia may expend her own money in paying these men in this way, I shall make no point of order to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order to the paragraph. The Chair has investigated this question in considerable detail. There has not been shown to him nor has he been able to find any authority of law for the payment of the troops. It is true the item has been carried in the appropriation bill for a number of years, but it is a wellunderstood rule of the House that an appropriation carried from year to year does not make continuing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 93, after line 21, insert: "For pay of officers, enlisted men, and bandsmen, as authorized by law, $24,000."

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not understand that this section is now open to any further amendment. The fact is that the point of order was reserved, and that particular paragraph was passed. The bill having been read, no right was reserved to offer further amendments.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is the gentleman opposed to paying the enlisted men in the District Militia for service when it is rendered?

Mr. CARLIN. I want to pay them. I want my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], to withdraw his point of order, if he will.

Mr. BURLESON. He has refused to withdraw the point, and the Chair has sustained it, striking out the item, and I am now trying to provide compensation for the District Militia as best I can under terms of the law.

Mr. CARLIN. I did not make any point of order. I was simply asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the Chair rule that that amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order has been made. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order that that point order comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You can not raise that point, because the Chair has just ruled on the other.

Mr. BURLESON. However, I will not make the point of order, as I am sure the amendment I offer is in order.

I send to the Chair the law authorizing the payment of the District Militia under certain conditions. The Chair will find marked with a blue pencil the sections of the law authorizing the payment of the District Militia under certain conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with that. Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state in this connection that I think the amount carried is too large, as the full amount can not be expended as was contemplated and authorized in the item stricken out, but I have no means of ascertaining just what amount would be required, and having no means of ascertaining it, I offer the amendment for the amount that was originally carried in the item stricken from the bill by the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will understand that the Chair holds this in order because of the language used in the amendment "as authorized by law."

The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 13, lines 11 and 12, for the purpose of correcting a typographical error. There is certain language used there that is unnecessary; it is mere surplusage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous constructions of the construction of the mous consent to return to page 13, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLIN. Reserving the right to object, I prefer to hear the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, in lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "assistant inspectors of gas and meters."

Mr. BURLESON. As stated, these words are mere surplusage. Mr. CARLIN. I make no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the page indicated, for the purpose of offering this amendment?

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. Burleson was agreed to.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Garrett, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to that committee to report said bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

amendment:
Insert, on page 55, after line 18, the following:
"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Chevy Chase School Building, $36,000.
"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Birney School Building, $35,000.
"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Takoma School Building, $36,000."

Mr. BURLESON. On that motion, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and all those in favor of the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 122, answered "present" 6, not voting 189, as follows:

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4109. An act to restore the name of Oregon Avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2750. An act to amend sections 90, 99, 105, and 186 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

RUREAU OF MINES.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910, was placed on the House Calendar. On examination the Chair thinks it ought to be on the Union Calendar, and if there be no objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 26, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 26, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon,

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the fel-

lowing prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, everywhere present, we would approach Thee in spirit of the king of men who taught us when we pray to say: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors, and lead not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would pay no sort of attention to the matter to which I shall now allude; but, inasmuch as there is an at-tempt on the outside of the House to create a false impression as to the relations existing between the Secretary of the Treasury and me, I will read from the Evening Star, a Washington paper, published yesterday, wherein this language is used:

Secretary MacVeagh has written a letter declaring that there is no truth in the statement made on the floor of the House by Representative Johnson, chairman of the House District Committee, that the latter had been refused permission from the Treasury for the expert accountant of the House to go over the Treasury Department records.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that my remarks in the RECORD will show that I never said any such thing. If I had said so, it would have been untrue, because neither the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, nor anybody else, so far as I know, has thrown or attempted to throw obstacles in the way of the investigation which is being made. I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the head of the financial department of the Government, asking for the use of one man of the auditors of the accounts between the United States and the District of Columbia, so that I might have the services of that man longer and oftener than can now possibly be done without the permission of the Secretary of the Treasury. In my speech, made here several days ago, I said that I had addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury asking for the services of this man, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has not deigned to answer my letter. Now, that is the only reference of criticism which I made to the Secretary of the Treasury. As to whether what I said upon the floor is the truth or not, I wish to read so much of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to me upon that subject. January 23, 1912, the Secretary of the Treasury addressed this communication to me:

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I noticed this morning a report of your statement in the House yesterday commenting upon a lack of courtesy on my part with respect to a letter of yours, and I at once took the matter up in the department. I think you are fully justified in feeling that your letter had been neglected; for, apparently—only apparently—that is true. On the other hand, most of the delay in writing you is due to the consideration which has been given to your suggestion and to some communication with the officials of the District of Columbia. But, after all is said and done in the way of mitigation, there remains the necessity for my personal apology to you, which I now beg to express.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that, as between the Secretary of the Treasury and me or as between the Treasurer and me, there is no sort of controversy that I am advised of, and I have made this statement for no other purpose than that the Members of this House may not be led into a false impression as to the relations between the Secretary of the Treasury and me.

METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill revising the iron and steel schedule. To-day is the day set apart for the consideration of pension business, and I ask unanimous consent that immediately following this bill that pension bills be taken up, if they do not conflict with Calendar Wednesday, and if they do that they may come up immediately after Calendar Wednesday. My purpose in asking that is that I desire a full day's debate on this iron and steel schedule to-day, so that we may take it up under the five-minute rule to-morrow.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] that he ask unanimous consent to consider the pension bills on the calendar in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. I do not think they will take any great length of time.

will take any great length of time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I did not expect much general debate on this side of the House, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] notified me yesterday he had gentlemen on that side of the House who desired to debate. If that side of the House desires to have that much time cut out of the general debate to-day, I will agree to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois. But I desired to allow five hours of debate to-day, and I thought the pension bills would not suffer by coming up immediately following this bill. But if that side of the House prefers to have the pension bills come up and take that amount of time, and then close the debate to-day, that will be satisfactory to me. But I shall insist to-morrow morning on closing the debate.

Mr. MANN. That will be for the House to determine.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I object to the request as it is formulated.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the pension bills may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and I give notice that tomorrow morning I will move to close general debate on the iron and steel bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] asks that the pension bills, in order for to-day, be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will call the first pension bill on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I suggest the Clerk report the bill on the calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand this is the day set apart especially for pension bills, and I ask that the first pension bill on the calendar be called.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair directed the Clerk to do, namely, to call the first pension bill on the calendar.

PENSIONS.

The first pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18335) granting increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized

Mr. SULLOWAY. I yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment, to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, on page 21. The beneficiary has died.

The SPEAKER. On what page?

Mr. RUSSELL. Page 21. That case embodies a bill introduced by the Speaker of the House. The widow named has died since the bill was ordered to be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 21, all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the paragraph referred to is the substance of a bill introduced by the Speaker I think it should be so stated.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did so state when I stated that I moved to amend by striking it out because this beneficiary is dead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 21, by striking out, in line 9, the word "thirty" and inserting the word "sixty.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 9, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixfy."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, that soldier, George W. Currier, served three years and a half. For six years past the evidence shows he has been absolutely helpless and unable to lift a hand or feed himself. In my opinion the amount ought to be $72, but I have fixed the amount in the amendment at the lower figure I have named.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up bill No. 10 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a committee amendment, to strike out the word "twenty-four," in the twenty-second line of page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six." I will state that there have been additional affidavits filed with the committee since this bill was ordered to be reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I insist that we have the amendment reported, so that we can know what we are talking about. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 22, strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would state that this is the only amendment that the committee has to offer increasing the amount, and in this case, as I said, additional affidavits have been filed since this bill was reported, showing that the beneficiary has now a cancer on his face and requires the attendance of an assistant all the time. The committee therefore thinks the amount ought to be increased to $36.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I desire to be heard to any extent on this bill, but I should like to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee in regard to a few points touching this and the two preceding bills. The bills 18335, 18336, and 18337 are largely for increases of ex-isting pensions. I should like to ask the gentleman how much total authorized increase is there in these three bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. About $80,000 a year. Mr. RODDENBERY. In the three bills? Mr. RUSSELL. In all three bills, as nearly as I am able to estimate the amount. I will state that there are 561 persons who are beneficiaries under this bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. In the three bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; and the average pension provided by this bill, including what they now receive, is $28.66 a month.

So we do not think we have been extravagant.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will ask the gentleman if it is proposed by his committee to report other similar bills at this session of Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think every two weeks the committee will have one or more bills. I do not know that they will have as large bills as these, but I want to state that the last Congress passed bills giving pensions to 9,623, or almost 1,000 a month during the regular sessions of that Congress. This session has already been in existence nearly two months, and this is the first bill for special pensions we have asked to have passed, and it carries pensions for only 561.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The last bill was passed, however, prior to the passage of the Sherwood pension bill, was it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. The last bill of this sort was passed by the last Congress, and not by this Congress.

Mr. RODDENBERY. At the Sherwood pension bill. And, of course, prior to the passage of Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; that is true.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman from Missouri think that, in view of the passage by this House of the Sherwood pension bill, it is wise and proper now to continue the enactment of these special increases of pensions, from $8 to $60 a month?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to say that I do. I want to say that I favor them both, but if either bill should be left unpassed by Congress it ought to be the general bill and not this one, which is supposed to benefit, and I believe does benefit, only those who are poor, needy, and helpless from sickness or age; but, as I stated before, the average amount that will be paid under this bill will be $28.66 to each one, including the increase here provided for.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Do I understand it to have been the purpose of the Sherwood pension bill to obviate largely just such special pension legislation as this?

Mr. RUSSELL. It was one of the objects of that bill, and if the Sherwood bill should become a law as it passed the House, I do not think there are 20 men whose names are in this bill who would get any benefit from the Sherwood bill, or who would be affected in any way by it. Since the committee reported this bill I am informed that 12 old soldiers whose names appear in it have died. Since the bill was printed 2 have died. They are dying every day, and in view of the uncertainty of the passage of the Sherwood bill we do not think we ought to wait for these old, needy, and helpless soldiers to die without doing, or trying to do, something for their relief.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman apprehend that there is any uncertainty about the passage of the Sherwood pension bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do. I think it is very doubtful whether it will ever pass the other body of Congress.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman think a bill similar to the Sherwood pension bill is likely to pass the other body?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course I have no way of knowing any more about it than anybody else, but the general impression seems to be that the Senate will cut down that bill perhaps onehalf. I do not know whether they will or not or whether they will pass any bill. I have no inside information upon that subject.

But if that bill should pass this bill will cost the Government but very little, as it will in nearly all cases pay the soldiers no more than they would get under the Sherwood bill, and no one can draw a pension under both.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to say that, in an apparently small minority, I cast a negative vote against the bills H. R. 18335 and 18336. The pending bill is H. R. 18337, and I shall likewise vote against that. The House has already passed a general pension bill, an argument in its favor being that it would obviate just such bills as this. The majority party, largely concurred in by the minority, insisted that this system of private pension bills is annoying, and in some instances vicious; that it often is unjust, giving people pensions who were not entitled to them and denying them to people who ought to have them. And if that argument was good during the discussion of the Sherwood pension bill, it is no less good now, and I am impelled to record my vote against them all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read a third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS FOR CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE REGULAR ARMY AND NAVY, ETC.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18712) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of David A. McKee, late of Capt. James Williams's Company N, Second Regiment Washington Territory Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry E. D. Patee, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Gabrielle Cooper, widow of George A. Cooper, late second lieutenant Company L, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, and $2 per month additional for each of the officer's children during their minority, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ernest S. Cash, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank A. Schaller, late of Company E, Seventy-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Noah H. Stout, late of Company D, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louis T. Moseley, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of John Dardis, late of Company G, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Cornelius Linnehan, late of Battery A, First Battalion Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following Hous

H. R. 1917. David A. McKee. H. R. 2051. Henry E. D. Patee. H. R. 8407. Gabrielle Cooper. H. R. 9212. Ernest S. Cash. H. R. 11007. Frank A. Schaller.

H. R. 11710. Noah H. Stout. H. R. 12249. William W. Waters. H. R. 12721. Louis T. Moseley. H. R. 15732. John Dardis. H. R. 16972. Cornelius Linnehan.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Richardson, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Russell, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the first three pension bills were passed was laid on the table.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be five hours general debate on this bill, to be equally divided between the two sides of the House, and that at the conclusion of the general debate it be taken up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the division of the time, but I do seriously and strenuously object to restricting general debate to five hours on this important bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York objects to that proposition, I will ask unanimous consent that there be five hours' general debate on this bill to-day and that it be equally divided between the two sides, the gentleman from New York to control one half of the time and I the other half. Mr. PAYNE. I have no

I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18642, relating to the metal schedule, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that there be five hours' general debate on that bill to-day, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Underwood was then agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Floyd of Arkansas in the chair.'

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that we be permitted to have a night session for debate upon this important bill. There are many gentlemen who want to speak upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that we have fixed the time for debate by unanimous consent, and I can not do that now. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

PALMER1. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of the proposed revision of the duties in the metal schedule of the present tariff law with the frank confession that I am not an expert upon the general tariff question nor have I any other than the ordinary knowledge of that particular phase of the question which is involved in the discussion of the proper rates to be levied upon metals and the manufactures of metals. Without laying claim, however, to technical knowledge or information of a practical character with reference to the manufacture of the various products of the steel and iron industry, so largely affected by this schedule, I feel that the large importance of the industry in my own State and district and the consequently increased interest which this particular branch of the tariff law possesses for the people whom I represent make a demand upon me to explain my attitude with reference to this phase of the tariff law which is especially insistent.

For a Pennsylvanian, representing a rich industrial district, to openly and strongly advocate a reduction in the duties on steel and iron and their various products presents an anomaly which would have been stranger to contemplate a generation

Pennsylvania was a pioneer in the industry affected by this schedule, and my particular corner of the State has bristled with iron and steel mills ever since American genius began to extract from the earth the wealth which was there found. Today steel is king and Pennsylvania is the royal palace.

Twenty-two of the 67 counties of the State have some pig-iron production. In 1909 there were 103 furnaces in operation in these 22 counties. Thirty-three counties of the 67 in Pennsylvania made iron and steel in greater or less quantity. In that year the State had a corporate capital invested in the steel and iron business—exclusive of black-plate mills—of $610,322,731, over half of the entire steel and iron tonnage of the country being manufactured in Pennsylvania, where the business has been in existence from the time the first puddling furnace was built in the southwest part of the State before 1817.

A master in the business has recently asserted that the next decade would see an increase in the production of steel in this country of nearly 100 per cent and that eastern Pennsylvania is destined soon to become the center of the stage from which this enormous growth in the prosperity of the leading American industry will be exhibited to the world.

The time was when many strong men in the Democratic Party of our State felt it their duty to the various industries of the State to adhere to the protectionist view, or at least to put every possible obstacle in the path of those Democrats of other parts of the country who would relieve the people in times of peace from the burden of taxes originally laid in time of war. But that time is gone. The Democratic Party in Pennsylvania, whatever may be its differences of opinion as to internal management or party methods, is a unit in its adherence to the principles of the party in respect to the great fundamental issues which grow out of the exercise of the taxing power. The great Speaker Randall in his day had a large following in the Keystone State, though the size of that section of the party was not entirely accounted for by agreement with his tariff views; but when he passed from the stage of action the following rapidly disintegrated and the demand for tariff reform has been as insistent and persistent amongst the people of that State for the last twenty years or more as in any other State in the Union.

The Pittsburgh millionaires have been able heretofore to convert the smoke of their chimneys, which gauges the rapid strides in their own accumulation of wealth, into Republican votes only because labor has been slow to awaken to the fact that it has not received its due share of the prosperity. Now, that that illusion is being rapidly consigned to the realms of ancient history the people of Pennsylvania, regardless of party, are losing their fear of the distress they had been taught to believe would result from any tampering with the tariff. I would to-day as lief throw down the gage of battle in Pennsylvania upon the single issue of the tariff as upon any other question before the American people; and once that State shall be rid of political conditions which have long throttled the popular will and nullified the popular expression I would face the outcome of such a struggle with entire confidence in the result.

My own district is one of the so-called protected-industry districts. There are but few congressional districts in the country which exceed it in the wealth of its industrial enterprises, either in capital invested or in the number of people dependent upon those industries for support. Eighty per cent of the slate mined and manufactured in the country comes from one of the counties I represent. The largest cement mills in the world dot the Lehigh Valley and scatter their dust as a sign of industrial prosperity amongst the towns where a large part of my people live; and nearly 10,000 men are employed in the giant rolling mills of South Bethlehem, while amongst the men who have honored me with their confidence are those sturdy workers who delve beneath the ground, and with lamps in their hats feed with anthracite the insatiable maw of industry everywhere. I recognize that the prosperity and happiness of the people who have sent me here are involved in the continued success of these industrial enterprises, but my mind has never known a moment's hesitation as to my duty in respect to tariff legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The tariff has been the issue in many a hard-fought battle in that district, and ever-increasing Democratic majorities have convinced me that our people understand that the welfare of the masses of the people is not dependent upon a continuance of Government-guaranteed profits to manufacturers which they are unwilling to share equitably with those whose labor has made any profit possible.

I do not defend my course in advocating lower duties on the products of the industries of my own district upon the ground that the welfare of the rest of the country demands it. I might well do so, but it is unnecessary. The welfare of my own people demands it. The reduction of duties on the products of the district will not injure the rank and file of producers; the decrease of duties all along the line of production will help them, for they are necessarily all consumers. With the tariff reduced on the necessaries of life and upon those things which enter constantly in large degree in all the activities of business, no decrease in the returns of the real producer will result, but a large increase in what these returns will buy.

I make the confession of my own lack of expert knowledge of the intricacies of the steel and iron industry and accompany it by discussion of this measure destined to affect it largely with less reluctance because real experts, with the training of a lifetime in the business, differ so widely as to the effect of tariff duties upon the trade and even as to the necessity of a tariff at all that we get little assistance in reaching a proper conclusion from those whose expert knowledge ought to be a great aid in the preparation of legislation of this character.

Andrew Carnegie, properly recognized as the foremost ironmaster of his time, and Charles M. Schwab, whose knowledge of the business from bottom to top has been gained from the varied experience acquired by his association with the development of the industry in many of its different lines, were recently quoted as expressing directly opposite opinions as to the very necessity of a tariff for the further development of the industry in this country. Mr. Carnegie declared that the iron and steel business has reached a point where it needs no tariff protection.
While he was saying this to a committee of congressional investigators Mr. Schwab was declaring to a gathering of manufacturers in Philadelphia that a protective tariff is still necessary to maintain the business at home, and especially to permit labor to have its proper share of the profits of that business.

It is quite possible that the different opinions of these men may be explained by the different viewpoints from which they look at business. The one is the statement of the teacher, who has made his pile and has safely tucked it away in a class of securities little apt to be affected by depression or expansion in the business and who does not have the same interest in the amassing of enormous profits by manufacturers within the shadow of a towering tariff wall which he once displayed. other is the expression of an apt pupil whose activities in the harvest field are employed more in reaping dividend checks than in cutting coupons and who has not yet reached the stage in the accumulation of wealth where he must change him-self into a sort of "corporation sole" for the purpose of giving perpetuity to his distributions of money in benefactions to the people whose demands for his product are bringing him in rapid strides to that comfortable and satisfying position. An analysis of the reasoning by which these two ironmasters have now reached contrary opinions and of the facts upon which each bases his judgment is calculated to inspire us with less confidence in the expert opinion of those interested in manufacture and to make us more inclined to respect the eleventh-hour judgment of such men as have tasted of the benefits of protection in the past and, no longer feeling the necessity of it, now recognize its evils and its sinister influence upon the development of our present-day civilization.

This difference in opinion as to the necessity of a protective tariff to serve the best interest of all classes of men affected by the activities of the steel and iron industry is not confined to these two masters in the trade. There are thinking men everywhere who declare that whatever justification there may have originally existed for a prohibitive tariff behind which the infant steel and iron industry might grow to full size, the present lordly dimensions which it has attained have made its further coddling unnecessary.

The United States leads the world in the production of pig iron and steel. In 1909 the production of 25,795,471 tons of pig iron constituted 43 per cent of the world's output, while our production of 23,955,021 tons of steel was double that of our nearest competitor, Germany, and was 44 per cent of the whole amount of steel produced in all the mills of the world. Our export trade has kept pace with the development of the industry, and the American manufacturer now looks to every clime and country for his market. Iron and steel products made up 11½ per cent of the total exports of this country for the fiscal year 1911, and agricultural implements-which in 1910 amounted to $31,291,351-cars, carriages, and other vehicles are not included in making this percentage. Iron and steel and the manufactures thereof went abroad last year to the value of In recent years American cutlery has gone to the Canary Islands, laundry machines to darkest Africa, printing presses to Siam, sewing machines to Madagascar, cash registers to South America. American-made locomotives pull Americanmade cars on American steel rails in Canada, the Central American States, Mexico, the West Indies and Bermuda, South America, Japan, and most of the countries of Asia. American structural shapes support buildings which tower to the sky in every hemisphere, and American wire stretches across every developed field in Africa, South America, Asia, and the Pacific islands.

While it may be admitted that the enormous growth of the industry, coincident with the era of high tariff taxation, may be made a plausible argument to support the one-time popular theory of the purpose of a protective tariff-to nurture into full stature the industrial infants which American genius has started on the path to strength and stability-it is also true that the development of no other industry in the United States illustrates so forcibly the iniquities which the opponents of the protective tariff system assert as its necessary consequence.

The first successful development of the business was followed by the imitation of venturesome capital which paralleled that development in various parts of the country. After the first mills had risen by the mouth of the ore mine and achieved some success the competition which strives constantly for better methods set the next mills beside the mouth of the fuel mines, and then the natural step of locating the mills where ore and fuel were found together followed naturally, with the result that increased efficiency and enforced economies made competition keener, resulting in benefit to the consumer and apparently without loss of the large profits to which the development of the industry had accustomed its promoters. If these conditions had continued to obtain, the patriotic purpose of the original supporters of a protective tariff might have been justified in the growth and prosperity of the industry. Protectionists might then have pointed with some show of reason to the giant strides made by home manufactures in iron and steel, with domestic competition taking care of prices, as conclusive evidence of the true economic value of their doctrine. But the usual result of coddling too long continued and paternal care too long fostered, nowhere more strikingly exemplified than in the development of this industry, followed with a suddenness and an enormity which staggered the imagination of men, awakened dreams of avarice never before conceived, and forced upon the American people new problems which must soon be solved aright or real opportunity in our American industrial civilization will be effectually and permanently stifled. Com-petition was replaced by combination, individual ownership by community of interest, and striving for trade with concessions in price or improvement in quality by sociable gentlemen's agreements, which restricted output, increased price, and forced purchase regardless of quality, all with the result that the protection afforded by the Government for the upbuilding of an infant industry was converted into an enormous burden of added taxation upon the people. [Applause on the Democratic

EFFECT OF DECREASED DUTIES.

While Schedule C covers all the metals and manufactures thereof, by far the larger number of articles covered by the schedule are comprised within the general designation of iron and steel and the products of the manufacture of iron and steel. The iron and steel sections may be roughly classified in three general divisions:

First. Iron ore:

Second. Those products of large weight and great bulk from pig iron through all the forms of manufacture up to wire; and Third. The finer products of manufacture of smaller weight and bulk and of larger value in proportion to weight.

It is necessary in the consideration of the effect of a reduction of duties upon steel and iron products to keep this general classification in mind, because the large cost of transportation of the heavier forms in itself constitutes a tariff barrier equally as effective as any rate of duty which could be laid by the law and collectible at the customhouse. Competition in the trade between various parts of the country is constantly regulated by the freight tariff, and the foreign manufacturer must not only consider that charge against him in his endeavor to reach the American market, but he must pay two additional tariffs made by the charges for transportation to the American port of entry and by the law which meets him with a revenue charge at that port. Every decrease in freight rates in this country operates to enlarge the area of com-There is a market near to the door of every steel and iron mill which is that mill's own customer without much regard for prices at other mills. Building operations, whether of railroads or other structures, which require iron and steel in large quantities, which are progressing in the South, look to the Birmingham district for their supplies, and Birmingham is protected by the freight rate from the competition of the Chicago, Pittsburgh, and eastern Pennsylvania districts. Similarly, the rolling mills of eastern Pennsylvania supply the smaller manufacturers round about and furnish the material for all structural developments at prices which Birmingham and Pittsburgh could not meet. The effect of railroad rate reduction is to extend the overlapping markets of the various steel and iron centers just the distance that the lowered rate will permit !

the manufacturer to ship his material farther than he could do under the higher rate. A like result will obviously flow from the reduction of the customs duties upon these heavier forms of iron and steel production, where transportation charges so largely enter into the final cost. A lowered duty will widen the zone of competition between the foreigner and the American manufacturer to about the extent that the reduction in duty will pay the transportation charge inland from the port of entry.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. The present transportation rate for a ton of pig iron from Birmingham, as I understand it, to the eastern markets—that is, New York, for instance—is about $4 a ton.

Mr. PALMER. Yes. Mr. AUSTIN. The water transportation on a ton of Scotchmade pig iron is $1.50.

Mr. PALMER. I think that is low. I think it is from $2

Mr. AUSTIN. I have read it a hundred times, as American consul at Glasgow, in invoices at $1.50 a ton. The duty proposed in the present bill on a ton of pig iron is about $1.25.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; or less.
Mr. AUSTIN. One dollar and twenty-five cents added to one dollar and fifty cents makes two dollars and seventy-five cents. Where does the Birmingham iron maker come in on shipping and selling his product to New York for the Eastern States?

Mr. PALMER. The rate on pig iron was made so that there would be competition, and the difference in the freight rate, taking the ocean rate and the inland rate which the foreign manufacturer must pay, as compared with the American rate, will result, as I shall show in a few minutes when I get to the pig-iron proposition, in competition in certain parts of the country. You can not possibly fix a rate which would result in competition in pig iron all over the United States. The foreigner could not by any human possibility get into the inland markets with his product.

Mr. AUSTIN. But he can get in along the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, yes; he can; and he will get into the Atlantic seaboard under this rate. He will get to the Atlantic seaboard, and the effect of this rate will be to push back the line which heretofore has barred him from further entering into the inside of the country, so that the territory in which there will be competition in pig iron will be that much wider by the amount which this reduction of rate will carry the article, with transportation charges, inland.

Mr. AUSTIN. Under this bill can the iron maker in Tennessee or Alabama sell a ton of pig iron in New England?

Mr. PALMER. He can not do it now. The freight rate now keeps him from selling pig iron or iron in New England. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not a fact that the railroads or the transportation companies on every change of the tariff schedule have availed themselves of the opportunity to raise their rates so as to largely wipe out the tariff decrease?

Mr. PALMER. I think that is very likely so. I do not want go into a railroad-rate discussion. That can be left safely to go into a railroad-rate discussion.

The reductions in duty carried in the present bill upon these heavier forms, which average about 37 per cent, while apparently large, sink rapidly to the vanishing point as the railroads begin to eat them up in transporting the foreign-made article. These conditions are bound to operate against large increases in imports, seriously endangering the home market of the American manufacturer, and so when we come to estimate the amount of increased importations by reason of the reduction in duties we find the limit of increase inexorably bound by the cost of transportation. It is this consideration which enters as largely as confidence in American ability, enterprise and energy, to sustain the belief of many men engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel that neither a reduction of the duties nor their total abolition would seriously affect the American production or endanger the legitimate profits of American capital.

In 1909 the American production of steel works and rolling mills, which included all rolled, forged, and other classified products of iron and steel, amounted to $985,723,000; tinplate and terneplate, $47,970,000; blast-furnace products, including all forms of pig iron, $391,429,000; all forms of wire, $84,487,000; or a total of $1,509,609,000.

The importation of this class of materials, being the class in which transportation charges figure to such a large extent, amounted, in 1911, to $20,508,979. The estimated importations by reason of the reduced duties carried in the pending bill amount to $28,007,000, an increase of $7,498,021. I take the figures of 1909 for domestic production because those are the last which I have been able to secure covering all these items, but the proportions were practically the same in 1910 and probably in 1911. It will be noted that the increased importations by reason of the reduced duties carried in the pending bill, based on the imports of 1911, while 36.6 per cent of these imports are only one-half of 1 per cent of the total American production.

In other words, the extended zone of competition by reason of the reduced rates will affect less than one-half of 1 per cent of the American production, an element of danger to the American manufacturer of which no man with knowledge of American resources and confidence in the American's selling ability and his aptitude for economies in production calculated to meet competition need stand in dread.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the estimated amount now of the amount of foreign-made goods that we will buy if this bill should become a law?

Mr. PALMER. I am talking now about the heavier forms in which we estimate the total importations to be about twentyeight millions, as against twenty-one millions now, and in which the American production now is one billion five hundred and odd million. As to all the articles of importation, they will run upward of $77,000,000, as against a little more than sixty millions in 1910 and $53,000,000 in 1911, and that will be an increase of 35 per cent on importations, which-will amount to less than one-half of 1 per cent of the total American production of all the articles included within this schedule, because the census figures of 1905, which are the last available figures for the complete production of the articles covered by Schedule C, show that the American production of all the merchandise covered by this schedule was then-six years ago-two billion nine hundred and odd millions of dollars.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, as I understand it, the gentleman's statement is, if this bill becomes a law, that we will buy Then, as I understand it, the gentleman's $77,000,000 of foreign goods that we now buy in this country.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, no; I do not say anything of the sort. Speaking in round figures, I said that instead of buying sixty millions abroad we would now buy something over seventy

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I am struggling with that same proposition, and I will ask the gentleman if he will yield?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.
Mr. HILL. As I understand it, you propose to increase the importations $24,000,000 and still lose a million of revenue. The thing I have been thinking about is this: If we are abundantly able in this country to meet competition without any protection whatever, will we not meet that competition and stop that $24,000,000 from coming in, and if we do, where is your revenue?

Mr. PALMER. The natural increase in consumption by reason of the constant advances in the uses of the articles covered by this schedule will more than take care of the additional onehalf of 1 per cent of the American production, which this increased importation amounts to, and it will do it with some slight decrease in the American price, perhaps, but without sufficient decrease in the American price to seriously affect the profits of the American manufacturer.

Mr. HILL. I might say the gentleman's argument is entirely correct if it related to cigars or whisky or liquors or luxuries of any kind; but would it make any difference in regard to structural steel or iron bars or anchors or chains or things of Mr. PALMER. Why, certainly.

Mr. HILL. If we meet the competition, and we would meet it, if we are able to do it without protection, where is your revenue if we do not have the increase?

Mr. PALMER. There will be an increased importation, because the American will not be so eastly able to meet the competition in certain sections of the country. The American will have a market which will be a little more, only a little more, restricted than he has at present, the foreigner being able to pass the port of entry a little further than he has been able to

Mr. HILL. How is he going to do it if we make it cheaper than we are doing now? That is the supposition the gentleman started out with in the beginning.

Mr. PALMER. He is going to do it largely by reason of transportation charges. He is going-Transportation charges are against him.

Mr. PALMER. One question at a time, please.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PALMER. I am not declining to yield, but I trust the gentleman will not ask his questions so rapidly as to shut off reply. Take, for instance, tin plate. Tin plate sells at a certain price in Pittsburgh. It costs the consumer in New Orleans or San Francisco very much more because, obviously, it costs money to carry it across the continent. Now, the foreign manufacturer can never in a thousand years, perhaps, with all the reduction we put on the article in this bill, bring his tin plate into Pittsburgh, but he can lay it down at New Orleans and at San Francisco at a price which the Pittsburgh manufacturer can not meet, and the Pittsburgh manufacturer will not have to meet it, because the natural increase in the consumption and demand for his product will still leave him, as an American manufacturer, a market which will be sufficient to take the ordinary supply.

Mr. HILL. Now, does not the gentleman know and will he not admit that the natural increase in the use of an article like tin plate is not particularly dependent upon the price as it would be affected by the tariff, but dependent entirely upon other circumstances; and another thing; so far as the gentle-man's illustration is concerned, the Pittsburgh manufacturer can float his tin plate down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers at less freight than the foreigner can put it into New Orleans, so that the gentleman's illustration is not quite fair.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the gentleman can not get any tin-plate man in Pittsburgh to admit that. He will tell you in plain language that he can not possibly meet foreign competition in New Orleans or San Francisco, and he says now we have ruined him. He is saying now we are taking his market from him, and that if this bill becomes a law the tin-plate industry is dead. That is what he is saying. What does that mean? It means that consumption is rapidly increasing in importance on the Pacific coast, where the canning business is going ahead so rapidly, and we are going to have a flood of competition from the foreign markets-

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman really believe that the lowering of the duty on tin plate is going to increase the consumption of tin plate and increase importations? Mr. PALMER. I certainly do.

Mr. HILL. And on account of the natural increase of consumption?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Then it must transfer so much of the industry to foreign markets, must it not?

Mr. PALMER. I will tell the gentleman what I think. There is not any importation of tin plate to-day for domestic consumption, as the gentleman from Connecticut very well knows. If there is, or was, a prohibitory tariff in the world, the tariff on tin plate is one. We get through the customhouse a beautiful-looking book revenue of about $1,800,000 or $1,900,-000, and we give back every dollar of it, or, at least, 99 per cent of it, in drawbacks. The only people who bring it in are the oil people and the canning people, who want to send it out as containers. We have written this rate at such a figure that the foreign article will come into this country for domestic con-sumption, and we will have a million dollars of revenue out of the tin-plate paragraph in this bill if it becomes a law, which will be actual revenue and not book revenue.

Mr. HILL. I concede what the gentleman says, that there is no tin plate, as a matter of fact, that comes into this country I also concede that prior to 1890 there was no tin plate made in this country, and it all came here. Was not that change from nothing in one case to everything in the other the result of a protective tariff duty on tin plate?

Mr. PALMER. Well, the orginial duty on tin plate in 1883 was a revenue rate of a dollar, and whether it be the result of the protective tariff duty or not, I am perfectly willing to admit that the enormous prosperity of the tin-plate manufacturers was due almost entirely to the prohibitive rates which the Dingley law put on tin plate and which the Payne law continued-both of them being slight reductions below the McKinley Act. have not any doubt about that.

But to-day, since that time, the tin-plate industry has grown by such leaps and bounds that, as Senator Dolliver said in the debate on the Payne law in 1909, it had grown to the very measure of the great American market place, that it had been big enough to give enormous profits to its promoters, and finally to sell out to the trust with a rake-off to the promoters big enough to buy the Rock Island system. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is what your protective tariff law did for tin plate. To-day, though tin plate abroad sells for $3.80, the American tin-plate manufacturer seems to be scared out of * his wits when he is selling American tin plate here for $3.60.

Mr. HILL. Is not that about $2 a box less than it was before the duty went on?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; the cost has come down. [Applause on the Republican side.] Is it not wonderful? The price has dropped-yes, like aluminum. I will say to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] I am not a very old man, but I remember when they brought me pieces of aluminum, and they were as strange to me as diamonds up in our mountain Pennsylvania country. These aluminum sheets sold for many dollars a pound. But aluminum has gone down in price under the benefit of this protective tariff system, and the Aluminum Co. of America, which has brought it down under this beautiful system, is earning now 180 per cent a year on its capital. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Are you going to get any pleasure out of that reduction in price when it shows upon its face if this tariff had not been entirely prohibitive the American manufacturer could have given his article to the consumer at an immensely lower price than now and still make the honest and decent profit that you and I make in our business enterprises?

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Is it not a fact that before we established the Mr. AUSTIN. American tin-plate industry we purchased our entire supply from abroad, and foreigners were charging us $5.20 a box for tin plate, and that later we reduced it in price, by the establishment of our industries, to less than $3 a box?

Mr. PALMER. I do not care whether it is so or not. It is absolutely immaterial. The prices which prevailed 25 years ago in the steel and iron business are no criterion by which to judge the situation in this year of 1912. That is true everywhere throughout all the length and breadth of the industry. There is not any industry in which the advantages have been so great by reason of inventions, economies, and various other causes to reduce prices as throughout the list of merchandise covered by the steel and iron schedule.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

Mr. PALMER.

Mr. HARDY. About that same length of time ago kerosene oil sold at 75 cents a gallon. The discovery of additional oil fields and the great increase in the production of oil has brought the price down to 10 cents.

Mr. PALMER. Yes. That is a stump argument unworthy of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut.

As to the lighter and more highly finished forms of steel and iron production, and of the product of other metals covered by the schedule, the situation is necessarily different. As to these it is difficult and would probably be unfair to argue from the average reduction carried by the bill, for each branch of the industry is affected by its own conditions, and the result of a decrease in the duties will be variously felt by American capital in somewhat the same proportion as the highly protective duties have operated to unconscionably increase the profits which have accrued from the operation of the business to the capital engaged therein.

It is impossible in this comparatively brief discussion of the schedule to go into much detail with respect to each of these various branches of the steel and iron industry, but in a general way it may be said that the effort has been made in fixing these rates to lay them at such a figure as will result in moderately increased importations, without material loss of revenue by reason of the reduced duty, which importations will result in competition between the American and the foreign manufacturer, which will have some effect in lowering prices to the consumer without bringing them down to a point where the manufacturer will be obliged to sacrifice a decent and fair return on the capital invested. They will not result in a decrease in the wages of labor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman permit one question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. PALMER. I would not have the gentleman anticipate my argument. I will probably answer the gentleman's question later if he disputes that proposition.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to ask the gentleman a question right there, where he claims that it will not affect the wages of American workingmen. The gentleman has stated that this bill will not result in the reduction of wages to American working-men, although he concedes it will admit twenty millions more of imports. Under such circumstances will it not affect the wages of American workingmen?

Mr. PALMER. It will not affect the wages of American workingmen in the slightest degree. When you talk about importations of twenty millions of foreign goods it sounds big, but if you talk about it in percentages, you will see that it simply means that less than one-half of 1 per cent of the present American production will come through the customhouses. That proportion is so small that the effect of it will be not to throw out of employment a single wage earner, but to modify and somewhat decrease the enormous profits which some of these steel and iron manufacturers have been making in the past.

Now, if the gentleman will excuse me, I will go on to demonstrate that more fully, and the gentleman can interrupt me later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield further.

Mr. PALMER. A reduction in the selling price of the product of any plant which makes the profit and loss account of the manufacturer at the end of the year show a less favorable figure will result in the reduction in that account being charged up to the returns received by the contributors of the capital. The original capital is always reached last in the distribution of profits. Interest on that portion of the invested capital which is carried as funded debt will necessarily be taken care of first, and a great master in the iron and steel trade has strikingly observed that the first mortgage upon the business is the capitalized cost of labor, and the first charge to be met, even before the interest coupons are canceled, is the wages of that labor. Out of the gross income, arrived at by deducting the cost of materials from the results of sales, must first be distributed wages; next, interest and depreciation in plant; and, third, returns to the contributors to the capital fund. These last returns in the steel and iron business, in all its ramifications, under the operation of a protective tariff, have been so enormous in this country as to challenge the wonder of the world; and we believe that the result of increased competition, flowing from a reduction of the tariff barrier, when charged against these returns of capital, will in but few cases reduce them below such a figure as money in other branches of industrial enterprise is wont to earn.

It is a favorite saying amongst steel and iron manufacturers that nobody makes any big money unless he sells out. The claim is made that the invested capital shown on the books receives only a fair manufacturer's profit. It may be true, but it is also true that the steel and iron people have the habit of selling out very highly developed. There is hardly a plant, certainly none of any considerable size in the country, which has not once gone through the profitable exercise of selling out. The profits on the sale, generally added promptly to capital account, then yield a sort of compound profit, which looks small only to those whose ignorance or lapse of memory conceal the origin of the new capital. Many a stockholder in iron and steel enterprises publicly laments the fact that his stock yields him but a paltry 5 per cent, while in the seclusion of his own counting room he gloats over the fact that these meager dividends represent a return many times as great upon the actual cash capital which originally brought him his shares. The amount which his capital earns is not properly gauged by the size of his dividends upon the par value of his holdings, but by the percentage which those dividends and his accrued profits converted into capital bear to the amount of his wealth with which he had to part to make the original investment.

The rights of so-called innocent third parties, the subsequent purchasers of stock, who enter the game long after the elevator has moved from the ground floor, do not alter the case. They are buying their share of accrued profits as well as capital, and the subsequent earnings are the returns on original capital just as much as if the holders had been let in on the start Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not this attempted manipulation which the gentleman describes account, in large measure, for some of the exorbitant fortunes that have been made in the iron and steel industry in this country?
Mr. PALMER. Yes; I think it does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not apply particularly to one or more of the individuals who have appeared before the steel-investigating committee?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; probably to many of them.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then will the gentleman be good enough to tell wherein the fault is with the tariff?

Mr. PALMER. It is at fault because it enables them to make such enormous returns on their accrued profits, at the expense of the American taxpayer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman complains about the selling-out system, whereby

Mr. PALMER. No; I was not complaining about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman complains of the exorbitant profits which are made by this selling-out process. I would ask the gentleman how that is attributable to the tariff?

Mr. PALMER. It is a favorite argument, indulged in by gentlemen sitting on that side of the chamber, that there is not big money in the steel and iron business, and that, as I understand it, is really the argument the gentleman is now making.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it is true, why should the tariff be blamed for it?

Mr. PALMER. I was answering that contention by showing how they were enabled to make this big money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not that properly be a matter for investigation within this country and not come back to the tariff barrier? Mr. PALMER. Oh, it comes back to the tariff barrier, as the gentleman understands.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not think the gentleman proves that in his argument. Certainly not by showing that a company can be formed with a capital of $1,000,000 and, by the selling-out process, enabling the disposal of holdings to manipulators or innocent parties for $10,000,000, thereby producing a profit of $9,000,000 to certain gentlemen. I ask the gentleman, even if that be possible, wherein is the tariff to blame?

Mr. PALMER. If the gentleman had followed me in my argument instead of going out to lunch he would not ask me that question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I listened to the gentleman's argument for quite a while before I went out of the Chamber.

Mr. PALMER. I was showing that this proposed reduction can not affect the wages of labor, but would affect the profits of manufacturers; and while these manufacturers are constantly asserting that they do not make any big money, the fact is, nevertheless, that their capital is largely made up of earned profits, and the profits on their invested capital are now so enormous that if we cut those profits in two we will not do any real harm to any American industry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wait a moment-

Mr. PALMER. I do not want the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I will answer a question, but I do not want the gentleman to go into an argument on the proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not approve this method of juggling stock and overcapitalization, whereby a plant or an industry may be sold out by its owners to innocent purchasers for a very much larger amount than it

Mr. PALMER. Of course I do not approve it. Much less do I approve of the stand of the American manufacturer after he has done that thing and multiplied his capital manyfold, in demanding then that the tariff shall be kept at a rate which will yield him a return, not upon his honest original capital, but upon all this capital accumulated as profits. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, take as an instance a case that I know about very well, and which the gentleman knows about very well, the Bethlehem Steel Co. Mr. Schwab, the president of that company, says that a tariff is absolutely necessary in order to keep his men employed and in order to make a fair return upon his capital. In all these years that he has been keeping his men employed in Bethlehem, as the reports of the Department of Commerce and Labor show, they have been getting wages, 61 per cent of them, as low as 18 cents an hour and less, some down to as low as 4 cents an hour. During all that time Mr. Schwab's company was able to build up its capital stock out of profits from $300,000 to $15,000,000, and last year this company declared a dividend of 10 per cent, and upon what? Not upon the $300,000 paid in on the stock, but upon the $15,-000,000, thus paying $1,500,000 in one year upon an original investment of $300,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I tell you I listen with little patience to these great capitalists who say, "Give us this tariff in order to enable us to get an honest return upon our capital and an honest wage for our

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman told the whole story about this great concern located in his district?

Mr. PALMER. No, I have not told it all. There is a lot more to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has not told the whole story of this profitable American enterprise. The gentleman has indicated that there is a difference of opinion between the two great iron masters whom he has quoted—Mr. Carnegie, who does not want any tariff, and Mr. Schwab, who does. The gentleman has said——

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman confine himself to asking a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will put it this way: Would the gentleman rather have a tariff which would protect the workmen employed in his own district under the direction of Mr. Schwab, or take it off for the benefit of Mr. Carnegie, whose employees can not now be located in this country, and who spends much of his time and American money on the other side?

Mr. PALMER. That question is not one which calls for a decision. I am not writing a tariff bill here which will take a penny out of the employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. are writing a tariff law which may result in such competition that the American consumer will get his article at a lower price than he gets it now; and perhaps my distinguished constituent, Mr. Schwab, will be compelled to be satisfied with something less than the exorbitant profits which he has been able to earn upon his investment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When the gentleman has taken the duty off-

Mr. PALMER. I want to discuss some other features of the

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman this: When he has taken the duty off, as proposed by this bill revising the metal schedule, will the price of iron and steel be less in the United States than it is to-day?

Mr. PALMER. In some sections, beyond a doubt. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then will it be Americanmade iron and steel, or will it be iron and steel made abroad under an international agreement?

Mr. PALMER. The American-made iron and steel in some sections will be less in price. The foreign article as it comes in here will be less than some of the American article. I have gone all over that in discussing the question of transportation, and I will not go over it again, because the gentleman preferred to eat his lunch rather than listen to me.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I listened to the gentleman with pleasure. If the gentleman does not welcome my questions, I will subside.

Mr. PALMER. I am willing to answer any questions about the things which we are discussing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking a question which is extremely pertinent to the working people and wage earners. I am asking the gentleman how, when he reduces the tariff, if he goes into the foreign markets for the purchase of the commodity, he is going to get a lower price for the commodity in this country and still maintain American wages?

Mr. PALMER. It is just as simple as A B C. Even the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to see it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am something of a Samuel J. Randall Democrat myself.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; I know the gentleman is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is why I differ slightly from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who does not now agree with his distinguished predecessor from the Keystone State

Mr. PALMER. I never did agree with him. Do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has come to be a leader of his party; he is the modern Democratic Henry of Navarre of the Keystone State, and I welcome him as such, notwithstanding his declaration that he does not agree with that great protection Democrat, Samuel J. Randall, who was the idol of the people of Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PALMER. He was the idol of that class so well represented by the gentleman from Philadelphia, who pronounces himself a Randall Democrat. Randall Democrats were largely Republicans. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I express, so far as I am able to do so, the views he presented in his day and which were so entirely welcome to the people of his district, which I now represent. Now, I will leave the gentleman, if he will answer this question: How, by reducing the tariff on iron and steel, can you maintain the wage scale in the United States and yet give the people of this country cheaper commodities?

Mr. PALMER. I have stated at least three times that the increased importations, while they look large in figures, are so small in proportion to the domestic production they will only result in some decrease of the enormous profits to the American manufacturer, who will be compelled to lower his selling price in order to meet that competition. The consumption will not be less after the tariff law is written than it was before. The American manufacturer will be compelled to employ all the labor which he now employs, and he will pay the labor just what he must, no more and no less. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He will pay the labor just as much as labor can compel him to pay, just as he does to-day, and there will not be any decrease in the price of it on account of the tariff law. If the steel and iron manufacturers would get all of their labor in this market, they would be compelled to pay more for it; but they get 60 per cent in a foreign market, buying it like any other commodity, from men who bring their product through the customhouse free of charge. They bring their free labor into competition with American wage earners, and thus keep the price of labor down.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman say that if $20,000,000 worth of iron and steel comes in from foreign countries in a year that it will not displace that much in the United States and take that much away from American labor?

Mr. PALMER. That is not true, with all due deference to the gentieman from Pennsylvania. He has his facts wrong.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The material is here, the labor is here, but for this $20,000,000 of imported product no wages are paid in the United States.

Mr. PALMER. In this schedule are included many articles which can not be and are not made in America and which would be imported under any circumstances. They are not articles of importation which cut off American employment. Perhaps in a few of the increased importations caused by this reduction of duty American goods will be replaced by foreign goods. But I repeat what I said before, and what is perfectly plain to everybody, that the advance in American business activity, the very advance in American civilization, is going to be responsible for the increase in consumption far greater than the slight increase in importations.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about Mr. Schwab.

Mr. PALMER. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. AUSTIN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman's statement about Mr. Schwab's enterprise and the immense amount of money he makes, and I would like to know why you gave him more money by putting iron ore on the free list. I think he is the largest importer of iron ore of any manufacturer in the United States.

Mr. PALMER. We put iron ore on the free list for the benefit of all the independent manufacturers who do not have iron ore in this country, in order to put them on an equal footing with the great corporations which do control the ore bodies in the United States. Among these independents is Mr. Schwab and the Bethlehem Steel Co., and to that extent Mr. Schwab is benefited by this act. There is no question about that. But Mr. Schwab is a seller of pig iron and he sells everything carried in this schedule up to wire, and on all of these articles, from the very first, we have cut the duty so largely that whatever benefit Mr. Schwab may get from free ore will be more than dissipated in the cut on the products which he sells.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman wants to discuss the matter later on, I will not ask him the question now.

Mr. PALMER. I do not know whether there will be much "later on."

Mr. HILL. I will admit certain things, but here is something that I can not admit because I can not understand it. The gentleman says he reduces the duty and lowers the price. You have put on the free list linotypes, printing machines, cash registers, typewriters, and sewing machines, all of them patented articles.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; and if the gentleman wants my honest opinion about that-

Mr. HILL. In almost every case I think the proprietors of the patents and the manufacturers of the patented articles have their factories abroad. Have you not, by reducing the duties on the primary materials, without in any way influencing or controlling the finished product, absolutely transferred to the owners of those patents and the manufacturers of those patented articles the benefit which you claim would arise from reducing the duty on the primary article, the raw article? In other words, have you not provided for a finished product free and a raw material at a somewhat lower duty than before, and then given to the manufacturers of these patented articles the privilege of getting their raw materials free on the other side, making them up in the parts, shipping them here, and simply assembling them? If the gentleman is going to discuss that question later on, I will not press it now.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman now. While it is true that these finished articles are brought in free, they are articles on which the Americans beat the world to-day.

Mr. HILL. Yes. Mr. PALMER. And which, under the gentleman's theory, are not entitled to any protection.

Mr. HILL. Even admitting that-

Mr. PALMER. I am not certain that the result of our putting articles of that kind on the free list will be to the benefit of the consumer, but I am certain that the reduction of the price of raw material will not benefit the manufacturer of that article which we put on the free list, because all of the manufacturers of these articles are so located in this country that the market at their door is the market they are going to deal with, as far as their purchases are concerned. The foreigner never can put any steel into Dayton, Ohio, for a cash register. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. HILL. But the manufacturer has a monopoly under his patent.

Mr. PALMER. That is his selling product. The gentleman asked me why we helped him by reducing the duty on raw material, though leaving some duty on it, but still placing his finished article on the free list. I simply repeat that we are taking away the alleged protection from a man who admittedly needs no protection.

Mr. HILL. Of course he does not if he has a patented article which gives him a monopoly.

Mr. PALMER. Unquestionably, and which will not result in any decrease of price, and we are dong no injury to the manufacturer.

Mr. HILL. But you are giving him an additional benefit by transferring the industry to the other side from where he can ship the finished parts to be assembled here.

Mr. PALMER. Is it possible that the gentleman from Connecticut is criticizing this bill because the manufacturer is going to get a benefit out of it?

Mr. HILL. I do not criticize or praise any bill because a particular man is making or losing money. I want him to stand on the merits of the proposition. I do not want to discuss the question of whether the industry is paying large or small returns in individual cases. I want to know what is right. I do not believe in transferring an industry to the other side of the water out of pique.

Mr. PALMER. I think what the American industries are earning goes right to the root of this question, because if, as I have shown here in the iron and steel trade, and as the gentleman knows perfectly well, they are earning unconscionable profits upon the honest capital invested, and if the result of a cut in the tariff will be not to hurt wages of labor, not to hurt the amount of production, but to decrease the profits of the American manufacurer, then the manufacturer's mouth is closed in attack on such a bill, because the profits he has taken out of the American people in the past have been more than his capital is entitled to earn. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Let me put the question in a concrete form, and then I shall stop. If the gentleman were a manufacturer of a patented typewriter, and could make it on the other side and ship it here either complete or in the finished parts, and paid the duty on the materials here, and did not pay a duty on the finished parts coming from the other side, would he not ship the parts from his factory in Belgium or Germany or England and assemble them here?

Mr. PALMER. No; I do not think I would.

Mr. HILL. Why not, if you can make more money by doing it?

Mr. PALMER. Why, I could not make more money.
Mr. HILL. Then the duty does not count.
Mr. PALMER. I have said several times, as far as this duty on typewriters, printing presses, and various articles of that kind is concerned, it meant nothing, never did, and there never was any defense for it.

Mr. HILL. It does on pig iron.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, well, that is another—
Mr. HILL. Would it not on the parts which are made from pig iron, the addition of the duty or the freedom from the duty

Mr. PALMER. Oh, certainly. If the manufacturer of the typewriter used imported materials, there might be something in the gentleman's argument, but you will find the American material man supplies him now.

Mr. HILL. Then he gets the benefit of that much absolutely. Mr. PALMER. I have discussed that as far as I care to go.

Mr. HILL. Well, I am willing to leave it there.

Mr. PALMER. And so am I. While it is not possible within the scope of this argument to discuss many of the sections of the bill in detail, I desire to point out the reasons for the changes in a few of the paragraphs in relation to which there has been much controversy in the past and about which the interests affected have already been somewhat caustic in criticism.

AD VALOREM RATES.

This bill contains no specific rates whatever. It contains no compound rates, but adheres consistently to the doctrine which we declared for during the extraordinary session of last summer when we reported and the House passed bills reducing the woolen and cotton schedules with every rate fixed on an ad valorem basis. In the case of some schedules, to be revised hereafter, it will doubtless be wise to insert specific rates, for exceptional reasons. There are, beyond a doubt, some well-founded objections to the ad valorem system. They have been voiced by the friends of a high protective tariff for many years. The stronger the friendship for high rates the louder has been the voice which condemned the ad valorem system. It is urged with much force that the administrative difficulties in the operation of a law containing ad valorem duties should cause the legislator to hesitate before accepting that system as the best calculated to bring to the Government the revenue which a tariff law is designed to secure. The natural desire of the importer to evade payment of duties leads to undervaluation of goods which is sometimes difficult for the officers of the Government to cope with. In the very nature of things, however, this objection is less potent when urged against ad valorem rates in reference to the steel and iron products, where values, as a rule, are easily fixed, because information as to the world's prices is always readily obtainable. There are objections, however, equally obvious and much more serious, to the straight specific system, which leaves out of all consideration the fluctuating values or changing conditions of the market and automatically converts a rate, fair when made, into one unconscionable when enforced. Especially is this true in many lines of manufacture included within the general classifications of iron and steel products, where inventions, discoveries, and various economies have operated with astonishing rapidity to reduce cost of production and consequent selling value, while the industry is protected behind a moderate specific rate, growing constantly higher with every advance in method or improvement in conditions of manufacture which make for lower prices. But every objection which could be urged against both the specific and ad valorem systems may be raised with equal force against the compound dutiesan ad valorem superimposed upon a specific rate—the favorite method of the latter-day high protectionist. If ad valorem rates induce undervaluation and make the administration of the customs laws difficult and expensive, compound rates must have the same result; and if specific rates are calculated to deceive the consumer and make the worse appear the better rate, surely a compound duty is no less guilty.

The ad valorem system, easier to be understood by the taxpayer, immediately responsive to fluctuating values and automatically keeping pace with changing conditions in the manufacture and market of the product, free from all the objections to the specific system and from nearly all the faults of the compound, we believe to be the most satisfactory to all parties affected. To say that such a system can not be successfully enforced by the Government is to indict the revenue officials with incompetence and inefficiency, which the friends of the compound rates dare not charge without confessing the failure of the present law to result in an honest collection of the duties laid under its compound system:

The only articles covered by the metal schedule where an ad valorem system of duties would be likely to result in serious undervaluations are cutlery and watches. The danger is possibly greater in respect to watches than any other article in the tariff law. A watch movement is an extremely delicate piece of machinery, and its grade and approximate value are determined by whether or not it has been subjected to certain processes of manufacture which can not readily be discovered by the appraisers. The number of jewels and adjustments has always been and will continue to be the true standard for determining the value of the movement. The lowest grade of movements, as classified under the present law, are those having seven jewels or less, and the importations of these at the average unit of value of only $1.07 have been very extensive. These cheap watches are seldom, perhaps never, adjusted to either temperature or positions, but the higher grade movements containing more than seven jewels are largely adjusted either to temperature or to positions, and the best watches, containing 17 jewels or more, are all adjusted both to temperature and to five positions. These adjustments require a long time in the manufacture and add much to both the cost and the value of the watch. No appraiser, however skilled, could determine the fact as to these adjustments and the consequent effect upon importing value by any examination of the movement however critical.

Not even by taking the watch apart, which is obviously not practicable, but which it would be necessary to do to determine the number of jewels, could the adjustments be discovered. In consequence, solely for the purpose of preventing fraud and undervaluations and to assist in the administration of the law, we have retained all the marking provisions of the present law, and have amended them so as to require the plate to be marked if the watch movement is imported "knocked down." Under the present law the provision as to marking has been evaded by importing the movements in parts and assembling them here after importation. It is believed this new provision will to a large degree stop this practice and make it possible for the Government officers to assess and collect all the revenue on these articles which the law intends shall be paid. The so-called marking provisions in the two cutlery paragraphs are retained just as written in the present law for similar reasons.

The adoption of a uniform ad valorem system of rates has made unnecessary numerous fine distinctions between the various classifications in the Payne law. Sizes and values of the product, while important in classifying the articles subject to specific and compound rates, are in most cases no longer necessary to be considered when all the duties are ad valorem. Such a system naturally takes care of the increased values and of the different prices obtained for different sizes. The schedule, therefore, has been much simplified, and nearly all the changes in the classifications under the proposed law from those fixed in the Payne law are explained by the reason just stated. Some few other changes have been made in order to give symmetry to the schedule by throwing into the same paragraph articles of kindred nature. Only one article, bauxite, has been lifted from another schedule in the law. This being an ore, the raw material for the manufacture of aluminum, which is covered by the metal schedule, it was thought proper to include it also within the same schedule.

Taking the classifications made by the Department of Commerce and Labor in showing imports entered for consumption of the merchandise covered by this schedule, the proposed law reduces the rates below those of the Payne law in 180 cases, while increasing the rates in 2 cases and leaving the rates at the same figure in 2 classes of goods. In making this comparison, the ad valorem equivalent of the specific or compound rates, as the case may be, as shown by the imports for the year 1911, is taken, although it must be recognized that in some instances this ad valorem equivalent is not always accurate. cles on which the rates remain the same are gold pens and jewels for use in watches or clocks. The rate on gold pens remains at 25 per cent. The amount introduced into this country is negligible and no reduction of the rate would increase importations. As to jewels for use in watches or clocks, the Payne law was already low. A lower rate would not result in increased revenue, and the effect of a higher rate would probably be offset by smuggling, which under high duties would become more common in articles of this nature.

The items in which increases above the Payne rates have been made are upon metallic pens with nib, a new classification under the Payne law, under which the importations are negligible, though the rate now is less than 8 per cent, and ferro-manganese. Scrap iron and steel shows only a very slight decrease from the equivalent ad valorem based on 1911 importa-tions, but this decrease is really larger than appears on its face, for we have made a change in the verbiage which will really result in the smaller consumers of scrap iron receiving the article at a price less affected by the duty than at present.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a question? As the gentleman was the particular agent in preparing the bill, I therefore take the liberty of asking him these questions.

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I find on comparing the rates which were adopted by the party which the gentleman represents last summer on watches, and so forth, there has been a very material increase in this bill over those rates. Was that done as the result of careful investigation, or was the rate of last summer the result of no investigation?

Mr. PALMER. Well, the gentleman from Connecticut refers, presume, to what is called the Cummins amendment.

Mr. HILL. No; the Bacon amendment. It was purely a Democratic amendment, supported by Democrats.

Mr. PALMER. The Cummins amendment-

Mr. HILL. Senator Bacon said it was his own, and it was passed in the Senate by Democratic votes, and came to the House and was adopted in the House by Democratic votes, and there was not a Republican who voted for it in either the Senate or the House.

Mr. PALMER. I do not care who introduced it, so long as we are talking about the same thing.

Mr. HILL. I refer to the question of watches.

Mr. PALMER. There was a horizontal reduction of 40 and 30 per cent in the Cummins amendment, which carried the metal schedule as an addition to our cotton bill.

Mr. HILL. Was that too much?

Mr. PALMER. It did not take out all the inconsistencies in the Payne law-

Mr. HILL. Was that too much?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; from a revenue standpoint.

Mr. HILL. From a purely revenue standpoint. So it has been increased new purely from a revenue standpoint.

Mr. PALMER. If the gentleman is right about the so-called Cummins amendment, and I have no disposition to dispute his figures, though as to this particular item of watches I do not now have them at hand.

Mr. HILL. I have the figures, from 28 to 30 per cent on watch cases, from 28 to 30 per cent on clocks, from 7 to 10 per cent—an increase of 33½ per cent—on jewels for use in watches and clocks. Now, the point I want to get at, and in all good faith, is, was the amendment which the gentleman's party sent to the President last summer for his signature as a completed act too low, or have they had reason to revise-

Mr. PALMER. The amendment which was put upon our cotton bill by a Member of the Senate, which was originally drafted by a member of the gentleman's own party-it was the particular creation of Senator Cummins, of Iowa-cut the duty 30 per cent on this class of goods; and as the duty was originally about 40, brought it down to 28 per cent. We cut the equiva-lent ad valorem because there were specific, compound, and ad valorems in the watch schedule, which ran up to very high figures. When we came to this schedule we discovered that a proper correlation of the various paragraphs by reason of the varying degrees of manufacture, taking into consideration the necessity for raising revenue, made it advisable for us to make this rate 30 per cent; and we did it, regardless of the Cummins rate or the Bacon rate or any other rate.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask this question, then: Take the case of scrap iron, which in the Payne bill was a dollar a ton, and you cut it and sent a bill to the President at 60 cents a ton. You have now raised it to $1.04. Were you right then or right

Mr. PALMER. Well, this is our bill.

Mr. HILL. That is what the chairman of the committee said before he brought in the other one. That is just exactly what he said, and I will read it, not in the gentleman's time, but at some other time. That was your bill, and that was the bill which you forced on us then and which you sent to the President for signature.

Mr. PALMER. That was our cotton bill, on which an amendment had been placed in another body.

You adopted it. Mr. HILL.

Mr. PALMER. And we accepted it when it came over here at the time.

Was 60 cents or $1.04 right, on scrap iron? Mr. HILL

Mr. PALMER. I say that the rate in this bill is the right rate on scrap iron.

Mr. HILL. And you were wrong last summer?

Mr. PALMER. We will not say we were wrong then; but we thought that we were taking a position that was better than the position that was taken by you in 1909. We were trying to improve the condition, and we are now trying to finish the job. the job.

Mr. HILL. We made the duty a dollar and then you cut it to 60 cents, and you now raise it to $1.04. Which is right?

Mr. PALMER. We think there is no reason on earth why scrap iron should have any different duty from pig iron. never have seen the reason for any difference, and we now make the rate conform to our settled belief in that regard.

Mr. HILL. I would not have any duty on scrap iron if I had my way

Mr. PALMER. I think the gentleman believes it ought to be

Mr. HILL. I simply want to know whether you were right last summer or right now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] yield to his colleague [Mr. Moore]?

Mr. PALMER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman the question now, because I do not want to interrupt him during his peroration. The gentleman said to the gentleman from Connecticut that this was their bill-a Democratic bill. I wanted to inquire—as I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the metal schedule—whether during the preparation of this bill public hearings were given to those interested in the metal

Mr. PALMER. I trust the gentleman will not take up my time with questions of that kind. He knows perfectly well what the answer to that is. We gave no public hearings to manufacturers or anybody else in the consideration of this tariff legislation, and the gentleman knows it. I trust he will confine his questions to the seeking of information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think this is very important, Mr. PALMER. I hope he will not attempt to inject into my speech the criticism of my conduct before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has not answered yes or no. Were public hearings given to the parties interested during the preparation of this bill?

Mr. PALMER. I think I said that we gave no public hearings in the consideration of this bill. We had the benefit of all hearings of 1908 and 1909; conditions are about the same now as then, and we had the benefit of a vast fund of information from other sources.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One more question, and I will not bother the gentleman again. In the consideration of this bill, which is a Democratic measure and which makes a vital cut in the tariff rates on this schedule, was any information obtained from the Tariff Board or were its reports in any way considered?

Mr. PALMER. As far as I know, the Tariff Board has not yet done anything in relation to the steel and iron schedule which would be valuable for any purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, in the preparation of the bill, which is a Democratic bill, the Tariff Board's recommendations have been in no way sought or considered?

Mr. PALMER. We have thought that the necessities of the situation in the country to-day were so great that it would not do to wait upon the extremely deliberate methods of this socalled Tariff Board. We do not know when its report will come in, if it ever will.

Mr. HILL. And why did you not wait for the Tariff Board's report on wool?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Tariff Board seems to have the confidence of the country just now, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] might have waited until it made its report on iron and steel.

Mr. BARTLETT. What authority has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] for that?

Mr. PALMER. The country has more interest in the rates we write in tariff laws in this Congress than in the findings of any tariff board. I want to finish what I started to say about scrap iron. The present law, carrying a rate of $1 per ton upon wrought and scrap iron and scrap steel, provides that "nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel fit only to be remanufactured by melting." The words "by melting" were new in the Payne law and were placed there in the interest of the large manufacturers who employ the melting process to convert the scrap iron which comes to their mills.

I hope the gentleman from Connecticut will continue his affirmative headshaking on that proposition. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Yes; and I have done so since the Payne bill was Mr. HILL. passed. I will not take any position on this tariff question which I am unwilling to maintain just as strongly when it is in harmony with any proposition brought in by the Democratic Party as when it is against them.

Mr. PALMER. The smaller mills do not melt scrap iron and consequently could not receive the benefit of this rate upon their importations of scrap iron. The smaller independent manufacturers have, therefore, been compelled to pay a price for scrap iron which is made by taking into consideration the duty which it would be required to pay if imported under another clause carrying a higher rate—that is to say, "and not fit to be remanufactured by melting." No good reason has ever been advanced why scrap iron and scrap steel should carry a lower duty than pig iron. Scrap is used for precisely the same purpose as pig iron and in many respects is more desirable from the manufacturing standpoint.

The increase on ferromanganese results from taking this alloy out of the pig-iron section and including it with kindred alloys like ferrosilicon, and so forth. The Payne bill as passed by the House made such a classification, but it was put back into the pig-iron section in the Senate at the solicitation of the manufacturers who sought this indirect method of reducing the duty on an article imported solely for their use. Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] kindly give that statement his approval also?

Mr. HILL. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Connecticut has been so generous in nodding his approval that I thought he would follow me clear through.

Mr. HILL. No. The gentleman is mistaken about that propo-

Mr. PALMER. As the rate on all pig iron under the Payne law is specific, the comparatively large unit of value of ferromanganese has made the equivalent ad valorem on importations since the Payne law went into effect about 61 per cent. This change has been made from a revenue standpoint. The production of ferromanganese in this country is limited, and the importations are bound to take place without much regard for the rate. The steel corporation is the only concern which makes its own ferromanganese, and the production in 1910 was 71,376 tons against 82,209 tons in 1909. During these years importations were, respectively, 64,106 tons and 107,790 tons, and in 1911 105,528 tons. The increased rate will have no other effect than increased revenue and will not operate to protect any American manufacturer nor increase the price of the finished steel product. It is not made for sale in this country, but is, in a sense, a raw material of the manufacturer used as a medicine for strengthening his product.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me for a question right there?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Will not the direct effect of it be to compel the independent manufacturers who do not own their own ferromanganese product to pay three times as much for it as they now pay, thereby giving an advantage to the competing concerns that own a ferromanganese plant?

Mr. PALMER. I think the independent manufacturers will have to pay more for their ferromanganese.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. But they use so small a quantity of it in proportion to their total output that the cost will not be felt, and this tax will be paid by the manufacturers out of their gross receipts or profits, and it can not be carried forward to the detriment of the consumer. At any rate, there is sufficient merit in that argument to justify an increase from a revenue standpoint, for surely there is not enough ferromanganese made in this country now for the use of the manufacturer, and that article ought to raise some revenue for the Government

Mr. HILL. The gentleman knows that it is essential in the manufacture of steel?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think he should increase the rate 230 per cent in order to get revenue, and thereby damage a basic industry?

Mr. PALMER. Well, the gentleman from Connecticut was on the Committee on Ways and Means in 1909, and the gentleman joined in a report on the Payne bill which put ferromanganese in at a higher rate, along with other manganese alloys; and it seems to me the gentleman should not object to our adopting his classification.

Mr. HILL. No. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The duty under the Payne bill is $2.50 a ton. This bill raises it to $5.75 a ton, although this is a commodity which is essential in the conduct of a basic industry, and independent manufacturers will be compelled to pay 230 per cent additional for the sake of securing that much revenue.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the remarks of my friend from Connecticut-

Mr. HILL. I do not refer to remarks. Are not the facts correct?

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman's remarks show how futile is the explosion of even a big gun when it goes off halfcocked [laughter], because if the gentleman will read his own bill the Payne bill, which he assisted in preparing, which in 1909 the gentleman assisted in bringing into the House—he would find that instead of ferromanganese being in the pig-iron paragraph it was placed in the ferroalloys paragraph, and it was only at the other end of the Capitol that they took ferromanganese out of the ferroalloys classification. The gentleman was right in the attitude he took in the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and all of you, so far as I know, supported the proposition that ferromanganese should bear the same rate as ferrosilicon and these other ferros. In the Senate the steel manufacturers got at it, and instead of cutting down the duty on ferromanganese, they took it out of the alloys and put it into the pig-iron paragraph, where it carries $2.50 a ton. My facts are absolutely correct on that proposition.

Mr. HILL. I will look the matter up to-night. I have not the details before me. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I do not want to cut the gentleman off from any time he may need. Mr. PALMER. I have been interrupted so much that I can not say all I expected to say, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. No; I will ask the gentleman a question when we reach the paragraph under five-minute debate.

Mr. PALMER. Now, as compared with the so-called Cummins amendment, which my friend from Connecticut insists on calling the Bacon amendment, which was the steel-and-iron schedule attached to the cotton bill during the extraordinary session of Congress last summer, the proposed law increases the rates above those carried in that amendment in 25 cases and reduces them in 55 classifications.

The Cummins amendment was a horizontal reduction, reducing the lower grades 30 per cent and the higher grades 40 per cent. It accomplished a reduction from an average ad valorem under the present law for the entire schedule of 33.35 per cent, based on importations of 1910, to an average of 21.50 per cent, or a reduction of 11.85 points, which is approximately 33 per cent. Such a horizontal reduction had no effect to straighten out the inconsistencies in the Payne schedule, and, consequently, in some cases resulted in a lower rate than those which we carry in the present bill, where we have attempted to make the rates more nearly conform to the relative stages of manufacture.

Without considering the additions to the free list carried in the present bill, its average percentage of reduction under the Payne law is 35.03 per cent. That is, on the average it results in a larger reduction than the Cummins amendment. The additions to the free list make this reduction even greater.

These additions to the free list carried in the present bill are iron ore, cotton ties, fence wire and wire fencing, cut and wire nails, tungsten-bearing ores, zinc-bearing ores, cash registers, linotype and all typesetting machines, machine tools, printing presses, sewing machines, typewriters, and tar and oil spreading machines used in the construction and maintenance of roads.

Some of these articles were included in the free-list bill passed during the extra session of last spring and now are included in the free list here for the same reasons as prevailed to include them in that measure; others are trust-controlled goods, largely exported now, on which the present duties are clearly prohibitive; and iron and zinc bearing ores are free listed in order to put all American manufacturers in those metals on the same level as to their raw material and to offset the advantage which the larger corporations now possess by reason of their control of ore beds in this country.

PIG IRON.

Charles M. Pepper, the special agent of the Department of Commerce and Labor who made an investigation of the German iron and steel industry, and of the industry in the United Kingdom, in 1908, discussed at much length and with great detail the costs of the various manufactures in these principal countries, and his findings are probably as authoritative as anything which has been offered or which can be secured. As to the cost of production in German blast furnaces of basic pig iron, he says:

pig iron, he says:

So many factors enter into the cost of production that no absolute standard can be taken. Blast furnaces and rolling mills located in different sections naturally have variations in the cost of their fuel and ore, and these disadvantages are sometimes equalized by advantages in the freight rates and the nearness of the markets for the half-finished products. However, the marketing of the product is not here considered in connection with the cost of production. Information obtained from those identified with the industry and confirmed by disinterested trade authorities gives the following result, which may be taken as the average obtaining in the localities named in 1908:

Dortmund district and city—

Cost of 1 ton basic raw iron, 57-60 marks, equal $13.57-$14.28; conversion of 1 ton raw iron to steel, 14-16 marks, equal $3.33-$3.81; labor cost of 1 ton basic raw iron, 3.50-4 marks, equal $0.84-$0.96.

Luxemburg—

One ton basic pig iron with 1½ per cent of manganese, 52-53 marks, equal $12.38-$12.61; conversion of 1 ton pig iron lnto steel billets, 24-25 marks, equal $5.71-$5.85; labor cost of 1 ton pig iron, 2.50-3 marks, equal $0.60-$0.72.

ANALYSES OF FIGURES.

The figures for Dortmund may be taken as absolute. Those for Luxemburg are high, it being understood that with the prices prevailing in the fall and early winter of 1908 pig fron could be produced at the works at 48 marks ($11.42) per ton. The Lorraine works, however, approach the figures given. At Aix la Chapelle, which is not a large producer of pig iron, the cost is $12.60 to $14.10 per ton.

While the British costs he gives as follows:

In 1908 the conditions as to cost of production approximated closely those which obtained in 1903-4, the general opinion of the trade being that they were a little higher, about in proportion to the difference in the selling price, which in the case of Cleveland pig averaged $14.40 for 1908, as against $12.94 in 1904. The figures of Mr. J. Stephen

Jeans, secretary of the British Iron Trade Association, may be taken as trustworthy. According to Mr. Jeans, the cost per ton of making pig iron in the two chief British districts approximates as follows:

Cost factors.	Cleveland.	Hematite.
Iron ore	$3.89 3.89	$6.20 5.10
Limestone	.36 .91 .16	.32 .97 .14
Bricks, clay, and boiler coal	.16 .55	.55
Total	9,92	13.45

While this represents a general average, it is agreed that pig iron in the Cleveland district has been made at a net cost under $8 per ton by some of the companies controlling collieries, as well as ore beds, and having exceptional facilities for production. The ironstone required to produce a ton of pig iron in the Cleveland district is estimated to cost the companies which have their own mines about $3 per ton at

As $13.50 is practically the maximum of British cost, while being the minimum in the Dortmund district and considerably above the Luxemburg figures, it may perhaps be accepted as a fair average of foreign pig-iron cost. Adding the duty of 10 per cent to an average cost of $13.50, and figuring the foreign freight and ocean rates at $2.50 per ton, which is the average cost for the ocean transportation, we have the possibility of pig iron laid down in New York without profit to the foreign manufacturer at $17.35, there to compete against Pittsburgh, which can lay down its pig iron, costing $14, in New York City for about $16.50. It will thus be seen that the districts abroad which are able to manufacture below this assumed averageand there are several such—will be able to compete at and near the American seaboard with Pittsburgh and with eastern Pennsylvania, which can put its pig iron in New York for approximately $1.50 less than Pittsburgh. That such competition can and will follow is the certain consequence of fluctuating conditions here and abroad which at times make American costs high while foreign costs are low, and vice versa. Judge Gary testified before the Ways and Means Committee in 1909 that, exclusive of profits on raw material, his company could make pig iron for $12.65 per ton. Mr. Schwab fixed the cost of pig iron at $14. The report of the Commissioner of Corporations, published January 23 last, gives the book costs, all charges included, as follows (p. 25):

The allocation of the "additional-cost" items to the costs of pig iron still further increases the advantage of the southern pig iron over the northern in respect to costs, giving for the total book costs per ton $14.01 for Bessemer, $12.82 for basic, and $9.65 for southern. As stated above, however, while these allowances for northern furnaces were too high, those for southern furnaces were too low. Therefore, if these allowances were all figured on a uniform basis, these additional costs for the two districts would be more nearly equal. If an additional cost of 50 cents per ton for both general expense and general depreciation combined be assumed, and it is undoubtedly enough for most iron and steel companies, the total costs would be as follows: Bessemer $13.76, basic $12.80, and southern $10.02 per ton.

Judging from the book cost of production simply, the southern pig fron shows a distinct advantage over northern basic pig iron, with which it should be compared, and not with Bessemer. As will be shown later (see Ch. VII, sec. 5), this holds true even after the elimination of intermediate profits. But it must be considered that this is counterbalanced by the much higher freight charges necessary to get the southern pig iron to the most important markets of consumption.

English pig can be laid down in Atlantic-coast markets now

English pig can be laid down in Atlantic-coast markets now to compete with the eastern American producer and the reduction provided for in this bill will widen the territory through which this competition can take place and make more frequent the conditions under which the domestic consumer may have the benefit of the lower foreign prices.

Mr. AUSTIN. Your bill enlarges the market in this country for the foreign pig iron, does it not?

Mr. PALMER. It enlarges the zone of competition in which the American maker of pig iron will have to meet the foreigner. He is meeting him now. There is no doubt about that. Pig iron is laid down in Philadelphia to-day for $12. Bethlehem must meet it, Pittsburgh must meet it, West Virginia must meet it, and all that we are doing is to make the country that is going to have the benefit of that foreign competition a little bigger than it was before.

Mr. AUSTIN. You are reducing the present duty on pig iron of $2.50 to $1.25, and giving that to the foreign manufacturer, so he can ship farther into the interior of our country with his output.

Mr. PALMER. We are not giving it to the foreign manufacturer. We are giving it to the American consumer, because by reason of the reduction the foreigner can penetrate farther into this market and make more competition and increase the number of persons who will have the benefit of that competition and reduce the prices somewhat. That is the proposition.

Now, I had intended to make some observations with respect to the statements of the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., recently made, that steel can be made in this country as cheaply as abroad, despite the fact that labor here costs twice as much, as he says it does in Germany and in Great Britain, and I had intended to make some comment upon the basis of fact which he lays for that statement and to argue from it that it did not show the necessity for the tariff which Mr. Schwab now argues for, and which does prove that the reduction we carry in this bill will do no injury to labor or to invested capital by way of funded debt, but may possibly result in such a reduction of price, by reason of increased competition, as will somewhat decrease the profit which he and others similarly situated have been able to earn in the past. But my time is running on so rapidly that I fear I shall not be able to go into that as fully as I had hoped.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman get his time extended so that we may have this valuable information?

Mr. PALMER. I will print it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. It is very important that we should have it, and it is very difficult to read those things. I hope the gentleman will give the information now.

Mr. PALMER. I have already used pretty nearly two hours, and I feel that it is unfair that I should use all the time on

Mr. MANN. I have noticed no impatience on the part of the Members of the House, and I hope the gentleman will give us the full information.

Mr. AUSTIN. I hope it will be arranged so that we can have two or three days' general discussion.

Mr. PALMER. If we had two or three days' discussion I would go fully into the details of wages and cost and matters with respect to two or three paragraphs, in one of which I think the gentleman from Tennessee is interested, and that is aluminum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Aluminum, pig iron, and iron ore are of interest to me and the district which I represent.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Alabama has given notice that to-morrow he will move to close general debate. I am unwilling to occupy all of the time on my side of the House, and therefore I shall soon conclude my remarks.

LABOR AND THE METAL SCHEDULE

I have referred to the statement of Mr. Schwab as to the necessity of maintaining a tariff in the interest of the iron and steel trade. At a gorgeous dinner of manufacturers given in his honor in Philadelphia recently he is reported by the press to have said:

Fifteen thousand wage earners depend for their bread and butter upon the Bethlehem Steel Co. You see there is really nothing that enters into the cost of manufacture but labor. Materials? Analyze materials. You find that material means nothing but labor. Freight and supplies? Analyze them. They mean nothing basically but labor; just so much labor. Therefore, my friends, you must acknowledge the obvious. If the tariff does not protect the manufacturing industries, the laborer must suffer. Either we must dispense with a portion of our labor or else we must cut down wages.

Our tariff system is the only system in which the average earnings of the workingman could have been so consistently increased. There has been only one year in the history of the organization in which they have not been increased.

Mr. Schwab's reasons for demanding tariff protection are interesting, especially when the rapid pace with which the profits of his corporation have increased under the operation of an amply protective tariff are compared with the snail-like advances in wages which he has grudgingly accorded to the men of his employ. His plaintive appeals for labor lose much of their power to persuade when met by his own statements as to cost of production here and abroad and by his own actions, under the tariff, of keeping labor down to the condition described in the report of the Commissioner of Labor, who investigated conditions in his plant in 1910. In the hearings before the Committee on Investigation of the United States Steel Corporation (p. 1303), Mr. Schwab said:

Mr. Danforth. How are the costs of labor in steel and iron industries in the other countries that you mention as compared with ours?

Mr. Schwab. Do you mean the cost per ton—the cost of labor per ton of steel—or the average labor per man?

Mr. Danforth. The labor per man is what I had in mind.

Mr. Schwab. The cost of labor per man in the United States is about double what it is in Holland and Belgium, and I should say two and a quarter times as much as it is in Germany. I refer to the earnings of the American steel workers.

Mr. Danforth. How does that affect the price of our product in this country?

Mr. Danforth. How does that affect the price of our product in tals country?

Mr. Schwab. I think the cost per ton in the United States is as cheap as it is abroad, notwithstanding the fact—

Mr. Danforth. Even with the added load of labor?

Mr. Schwab. Yes. I think the reason for that is because we manufacture in such large quantities. We manufacture under the economic conditions that I spoke of, and our tonnages are so great.

Mr. Steeling. Why is the tariff duty necessary, if you can produce a ton here as cheaply as they can there?

Mr. Schwab. For the same reason that the tariff duty is necessary over there. Why do they have a high tariff with this low labor?

Mr. Sterling. You would say, then, that the only purpose of our tariff was to set off the tariff of other countries?

Mr. Schwar. The tariff would, I think, protect our own labor, as a matter of fact, because in some of these countries they have very cheap raw material. China, for example, is now shipping pig iron into the United States.

When pressed by a member of the committee who is an avowed advocate of high protection to explain this remarkable statement, because, as the questioner said (p. 1335), if he was correct, "There is no justification on earth for any tariff on these rails," he exposed the bogy which seems to keep all American manufacturers awake at night. "If Germany could ship another million tons of rails into the United States," he said, "it would enable them to devise the same mechanical appliances and methods for cheap production of steel rails that we In other words, German manufacturers are have to-day." throwing away money every day and only waiting for the American market to be open to them to start such economies and improved methods as American manufacturers practice. Profits are of no importance to them unless made out of American trade. And this equal cost at home and abroad, Mr. Schwab says, is maintained despite the fact that labor here costs twice as much as in Germany and other foreign countries. To support that assertion he declares that Bethlehem pays its menexcluding salaries—on an average, $1,000 per annum, including boy apprentices, "and you will find this about the same in the Steel Corporation."

It may be observed in passing that the men at Bethlehem, if they could get the time from their toil to read this interesting statement of their president, would doubtless be much pleased to learn of this sudden increase in their wages, for the company reported at the time of the investigation of strike conditions at Bethlehem by the Department of Commerce and Labor that the average wages paid the men at the Bethlehem works were $727.11 per annum. This average was obtained despite the fact that 62 per cent of the total number employed were working for amounts varying from 4 to 18 cents per hour. But I suspect their pleasure would have been vastly increased if the announcement had been made by the paymaster when the pay envelopes were distributed at the end of a week's grueling work instead of by the president when he was so far away from the plant that the paymaster could not hear nor heed. The only increase of wages at Bethlehem since that report was made, concerning which the public has any information at least, was that which was accompanied by a great blare of trumpets soon after the strike was settled, when widespread advertisement was given to the fact that the company had increased the wages of nearly 3,000 employees 10 per cent. Inquiry at that time developed the fact that this large increase consisted in raising the wages of common labor from $1.25 for a 10-hour day to $1.37\frac{1}{2}.

The last published report of the secretary of internal affairs of the State of Pennsylvania, covering industrial statistics for that State, shows the average wages paid per annum in the pigiron industry to be $627.20; in steel mills which do not make a rolled or finished product, $622.09; in steel works which have rolling mills and make a finished product, $682.16; in iron mills, $581.48; in the tin-plate industry, $700.72.

The fact is that Mr. Schwab, like the United States Steel Corporation, and fike every other manufacturer in the steel and iron business, pays his labor just what he must; no more and no less. He buys his labor in the market for the lowest price which market conditions permit. About 60 per cent of it he buys in a free market, for that proportion of his men are for-eigners who have come here bringing their product free from any charge at the customhouse and willing to work at a less sum than their fellow workmen in this country can do.

If Mr. Schwab's statement that steel can be made as cheaply here as abroad is to be taken at its face value, and he is probably the expert of greatest practical knowledge in the country, we must assume that he based it upon his imaginary scale of wages of an average of $1,000 per annum. As the facts seem to be that the average wages are at least 30 per cent below that figure, his men have good claim to ask for the difference between the actual and the imaginary wage scale, for is not the tariff maintained so that labor shall not suffer?

Now, how has labor prospered at Bethlehem during all the ears of high protection? And how has capital suffered during the troublous times since this great ironmaster took hold of that

The report of the strike at the Bethlehem Steel Works, pre pared under the direction of Charles P. Neill, Commissioner of Labor, printed as Senate Document No. 521, Sixty-first Congress, describes the conditions of labor in that plant and the wages received by the men. It is a striking commentary upon the off-repeated argument of the steel and iron manufacturers that the tariff is necessary to continue the high wages of labor and improve the condition of the workingman, and adequately answers the other time-worn argument that the wages of labor in the last 10 years have been constantly increased; for a comparison of the wages shown by this report and of the wages paid by the Steel Corporation with those paid 10 years ago proves that while the efficiency of labor in promoting added production has increased nearly 50 per cent, wages have in-creased less than 15 per cent. Dr. Neill says (pp. 10 and 11):

creased less than 15 per cent. Dr. Neill says (pp. 10 and 11):

In January, 1910, 9,184 names appeared on the pay roll. Of this number 79 worked in occupations regularly requiring 13½ hours a day for the entire 7 days of the week; 3 worked in occupations regularly requiring 13 hours for the 7 days of the week; and 11 at occupations regularly requiring 13 hours for 6 days a week. Three worked 123 hours 7 days a week, 26 worked this number of hours 6 days a week, and 48 worked a 123-hour day 5 days a week.

Of the total employees appearing on the January pay roll, 2,322 worked in occupations regularly requiring 12 hours a day for the 7 days of the week and 2,233 worked in occupations regularing 12 hours a day for 6 days in the week. Thus, 4,725, or 51 per cent of the 9,184 employees on the pay roll, were employed in occupations regularly requiring 12 or more hours per day on their regular working day.

Of the 9,184 employees on the pay roll, 5,244 worked over 10 hours at least 6 days a week; something less than 4,000 of the entire force had 5½ hours per day on Saturday. Excluding this Saturday half holiday and considering the other 5 working days of the week only, over 99 per cent of the entire force of the works had a normal working day of 10 hours and 25 minutes or over.

A further analysis of the January pay roll of the company shows that out of 9,184 persons employed during that month, 2,628, or 29 per cent, worked regularly 7 days a week. Sunday work was for them the rule and was not considered overtime. Some of this number were in departments where the work is necessarily a continuous process from which Sunday work can not be largely eliminated. Of the 2,628 regular 7-day workers, 79 worked 13 hours and 10 minutes per day or night, 2,322 worked 12 hours per day or night, and 212 worked 10 hours and 25 minutes; a few only worked other irregular hours.

OVERTIME AND SUNDAY WORK.

OVERTIME AND SUNDAY WORK.

Practically 71 per cent of the entire force, or 6,504 persons, had nominally a 6-day week; that is, 6 days was their normal working week, and no Sunday work was done, except as overtime. Of these 6-day workers, 40 had a working day exceeding 12 hours, 2,233 worked 12 hours per day or night, while 3,893 worked 10 hours and 25 minutes per day from Monday to Friday, and 5 hours and 20 minutes on Saturday.

And again (pp. 18 and 19):

And again (pp. 18 and 19):

That is to say, some 29 per cent of the men worked in departments which run regularly 7 days a week, and in which, of course, Sunday work was not considered overtime. Again, as practically 54 per cent of the total employees were on a regular 12-hour day, they were not interested in overtime work, which ordinarily could not exist for them.

The protest against overtime and Sunday work came only from the departments normally working 6 days a week, and from those which worked 10 hours and 25 minutes per day from Monday to Friday and 5 hours and 20 minutes on Saturdays. It was, in fact, a protest from those enjoying the shortest hours per day and per week against encroachments which they claim they thought might ultimately make the longest hours the uniform ones for the entire plant.

The January pay roll shows that large numbers of laborers were working for 12½ cents an hour, 12 hours a day, 7 days in the week. Of the 9.184 employed in January, 2,640, or 28.7 per cent, were working for 12 and under 14 cents an hour; 1.528, or 16.6 per cent, for 14 and under 16 cents an hour. Forty-eight and five-tenths per cent of all employees were getting less than 16 cents an hour. 31.9 per cent less than 14 cents, and 61.2 per cent less than 18 cents an hour.

The following table gives classified hourly earnings of the entire force, irrespective of occupations or departments. The figures are based on the January (1910) pay roll:

These conditions obtained during the same period of time covered by the statement of the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co. when he wrote, under date of November 5, 1909:

The capital stock of the Bethlehem Steel Co. amounts to $15,000,000 (all owned by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation), divided into 300,000 shares at $50 par. While nominally only $1 per share has been paid in, the surplus of the company is practically sufficient to pay the stock in full, and the company intends to issue stock to represent this surplus.

Apparently this intention of the company was carried out and the earned profits added to the capital account, for in 1910 we find that the Bethlehem Steel Co. earned, net, after liberal additions to depreciation and furnace relining reserves and considerable redemption of funded debt, the comfortable amount of $1,789,462.09, which was sufficient to nearly double the then surplus and declare and pay a dividend of 10 per cent, amounting to $1,500,000 on the capital stock of the company, which, according to Mr. Schwab's statement, consisted of $300,000 contributed in cash and $14,700,000 earned profits. What this return on the actual cash investment amounted to is a simple problem in arithmetic in the solution of which the men at Bethlehem, whose wages have been tabulated by the Bureau of Labor, would find an interesting though unprofitable occupation. TIN PLATE.

The tariff act of 1883 fixed the duty on tin plates at 1 cent per pound, and under it importations reached high-water mark in 1889, when 331,311 gross tons, of the value of $21,726,707, came through the customhouse. The McKinley tariff of 1890 made the duty 2.2 cents per pound, which, however, did not become operative until July 1, 1891. This prospective increase in the duty kept the importations up, and though slightly falling off in tonnage, they increased in value. From the beginning of the operation of the McKinley law down to the present day the importations have been steadily downward, from $25,900,305 in 1891 to $1,134,314 in 1911. The McKinley rates were practically prohibitive, and the Dingley rates, which were 1½ cents per pound, and the present duty of 1.2 cents per pound, have been equally so. Ever since 1896 all such tin plates as have been imported have been chiefly by the oil and canning interests for reexportation as containers, by reason of which, under the drawback provision of the tariff law, 99 per cent of the duty has been refunded and the Government has actually received no benefit whatever from this duty. The drawbacks paid on tin plate are larger than upon any other item of importations and constitute 94 per cent of the total drawbacks paid on all products of iron and steel.

Tin plate is made by the United States Steel Corporation, and also by a number of independent concerns, there being now 16 or 17 plants in 5 States, two-thirds of them in what is known as the Pittsburgh district. The independents have declared that they would be satisfied with a further reduction of the present duty to 1 cent per pound, or $1 per package of 100 pounds.

An examination of cost of production and transportation charges, however, clearly shows that such a rate would be just as prohibitive now as the rate of 2.2 cents was under the McKinley law. The duty fixed by the pending bill of 20 per cent is equivalent to 64 cents per hundred pounds, and this will result in an estimated revenue of $1,000,000.

It is currently reported that the importation of tin plate for export by the oil and canning industries is about over, for the United States Steel Corporation is said to have contracted to furnish tin plate required by these large consumers, so that the revenue estimated to be secured under this duty will be actual revenue and not merely the book revenue, which the tin-plate section now produces.

The consumption of tin plate is very largely in and near the seaboard cities, and the foreigner, by reason of the low ocean freight rates, unquestionably has some advantage in these markets. More than two-thirds of the domestic production is in the Pittsburgh district, while the consumption in that particular district is relatively very small. While the American price for 1910 was $3.60 per hundred pounds, obviously the price which the consumer had to pay was increased by the freight tari. I to various sections of the country, a tariff so high as to make it impossible for the foreigner, even with his cheaper ocean rates, to undersell the American at the point of

The duty proposed under the present bill will preserve the Atlantic coast and eastern market for the American manufacturer in addition to all the great inland territory, which the foreigner can not possibly reach. It will, at the same time, permit competition in the Gulf and Pacific markets, a share of the business which the American will either be forced to relinquish, reduce the present price of his product, or build his plant nearer to the point of consumption, where his raw materials can be secured at even less cost than he now gets them in the Pittsburgh district; in either of which cases the consumer will be very materially benefited.

The American tin-plate manufacturer contends that his Welsh competitor has an advantage at present of $1.11 per hundred pounds by reason of the lower cost of foreign labor and raw materials, smaller capital of the foreign investment, and lower freight cost from mills to consuming points. In this estimate he includes 15 cents per hundred pounds as the differential in favor of the foreigner on the cost of raw materials, while admitting that at the present time there is no actual difference in this cost between Wales and the Pittsburgh district. His natural desire for protection breeds the fear that there may be such a difference in the future. He includes also 40 cents per hundred pounds for average difference in favor of the foreigner in freight rates. This alleged average difference in freight rates is unsupported by the facts. The differential in freight rates to the Atlantic seaboard is 7 cents per hundred pounds; to San Francisco, not to exceed 25 cents; and to New Orleans, 24 cents. Eliminating the alleged lower cost of foreign raw materials and correcting the differential in freight rates we find that hy placing the lower cert of foreign labor. rates, we find that by placing the lower cost of foreign labor at 45 cents per hundred pounds, which is probably excessive, the smaller foreign capital invested at 10 cents, and the freight differential to American seaboard cities at 7 cents, the foreigner has an advantage of 62 cents per hundred pounds, while the proposed duty is 64 cents. The seaboard cities and eastern market will thus be secured to the American manufacturer, while a larger differential in ocean freight rates to New Orleans and San Francisco will result, as before stated, in the duty being insufficient to keep out the foreign article, as long as present prices obtain. The American tin-plate manufacturer will not be seriously injured for he is, even under present conditions, becoming less of a factor in the Pacific markets, and the increased domestic consumption arising out of the phenomenal increase in the canning industry in all parts of the United States will leave him with a market ample to absorb his entire production even if he must abandon the New Orleans territory. He still has his enormous foreign market, rapidly and constantly increasing. The figures of the Bureau of and constantly increasing. The figures of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, show, for instance, that the imports for October, 1909, were 11,117,035 pounds, while in the same month of 1911 it had fallen to 1,286,877 pounds. The exports, on the other hand, increased from 1,414,110 pounds in October, 1909, to 15,941,893 pounds in 1911. The average import price was $2.70 in October, 1909, as against $3.80 in October, 1911. As the American price is $3.60, it does not seem that the American manufacturer need have much cause to complain, at least as long as the present conditions as to the price of raw material at home and abroad continue.

The inquiry may naturally suggest itself, Why confine the benefits of the reduced rates, as far as prices are concerned, to the Gulf and Pacific markets?

Why write the rate at a figure high enough to permit the manufacturer to have his large, valuable, and exceedingly profitable Atlantic coast market undisturbed by foreign competi-tion? It must be remembered that there are a number of comparatively small, independent concerns engaged in this industry who have built up their business under hothouse conditions more carefully devised for their benefit than in the case of most other industries. Without desiring to protect the profits of these manufacturers to any extent, we must have regard for the effect upon a business created under Government favoritism-in which the manufacturer's end of the partnership was entered into in absolute good faith-and we must accommodate the proposed reductions somewhat to the ability of the industry to bear them without actual distress or excuse for feigned distress. Besides, the extension of the area of competition is bound to have some effect in lessening prices in the interest of the consumer even in the noncompeting territory saved to the American manufacturer by reason of advantages in freight rates. The general tendency of this reduction of duty, as in the case of nearly all the heavier forms of iron and steel production, will be to decrease prices everywhere, in some places more than in others, but nowhere enough to cripple the industry, because natural conditions as to location of factory and market and increased demand from certain advances in uses of the product will always operate to the benefit of the home producer.

It may be of interest to some of our friends on the other side, especially those who have at times shown a disposition to aid us in giving relief from the burdens of tariff taxation, to recall that the enormous protection afforded tin-plate manufacturers under former laws was one of the conditions which called forth the powerful philippics of the lamented Senator Dolliver:

Is it possible-

He said-that a man, because he voted for the Allison tin-plate rate of 1889 and heard poor McKinley dedicate the first tin-plate mill in America, can be convicted in this Chamber of treachery to the protective-tariff system if he desires that schedule reexamined, after seeing the feeble enterprise of 1890 grown within a single decade to the full measure of this market place, organized into great corporations, overcapitalized into a speculative trust, and at length unloaded on the United States Steel Co., with a rake-off to the promoters sufficient to buy the Rock Island system? If a transaction like that has made no impression upon the mind of Congress, I expose no secret in saying that it has made a very profound impression on the thought and purpose of the American people.

ALUMINUM.

Crude aluminum carries a duty under the Payne law of 7 cents per pound, while aluminum in plates, sheets, bars, and rods carries a duty of 11 cents per pound. Bauxite, which is the ore from which aluminum is made by various chemical processes, is protected by a duty of $1 per ton, carried in the agricultural schedule. Alumina, or refined bauxite, is carried in the chemical schedule with a duty on which the equivalent ad valorem, based on importations of 1911, was 24.56 per cent.

Bauxite is worth approximately $5 per ton at the mines in this country, all of which are situated in Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, and Arkansas, so that the duty is equivalent to 20 per cent of the American price. The foreign price for export is about the same. The equivalent ad valorem on the present specific duties on crude aluminum, based on 1911 imports, was 46 per cent, and on plates, and so forth, 47 per cent, the total importations amounting to about 15 per cent of the domestic production and being only a little in excess of the exports. The rate in this bill of 25 per cent is therefore equivalent to about 4 cents per pound on crude and about 6 cents per pound on plates, and so forth.

The aluminum-manufacturing business is all in the hands of one concern, the Aluminum Co. of America, which owns 20,000 acres of bauxite-producing land in the South, has large power plants along the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers, and manufacturing plants at East St. Louis and Pittsburgh. It produces all of its own bauxite and sells bauxite to manufacturers of alum sulphate in all parts of the country.

The foreign and American prices of bauxite being about the same and the article, like all other ores, being of large bulk, the only effect of a reduction of the duty would be to extend the zone of competition, which is now confined to points near the Atlantic coast. The southern bauxite can be laid down at all points from Pittsburgh west at such a price that the foreigner could not compete even if the ore were duty free. A reduction of the duty to 10 per cent would make the new duty about 50 cents a ton and would result in considerably more revenue to the Government by reason of the enlarged zone of competition which would thus be made, and the American producer would not be injured, because the market still left to him would be large enough to take the normal supply.

The present rate on aluminum is, of course, not prohibitive, for 15 per cent of the American consumption comes through the customhouse, and a reduction of the duty of about 50 per cent would unquestionably largely increase the imports. It doubtless costs the American manufacturer more money to produce his article than it does the foreigner, but the best information obtainable in the case is that a duty of 25 per cent would approximately equalize this difference and operate to increase competition and somewhat lower the American price of the

The history of the Aluminum Co. of America pretty plainly indicates that such lowering of the price of its product would not cut its profits below an honest and decent return for the capital invested. Its present capital of $35,000,000, on which it earned last year 18 per cent, represents $3,000,000 in cash, contributed to the company by stockholders, and $32,000,000 of accumulated profits. Most of these profits were earned when the company's process was protected by an American patent, but the profits since the patent expired have been so generous that it presents a typical case illustrative of the ability of a manufacturing enterprise under the operation of a competitive tariff to give the people its product at a less price and still make a generous return upon the capital actually invested, without a reduction of operating expenses by cutting down the wages of labor. In fact, the company frankly admits that the only effect of a reduction of duty would be a loss of profits to it because of a decreased selling price of its product—that it could not and would not reduce the wages of its operatives, for these are now fixed by conditions which would be unaffected by tariff changes. Considering that its profits have been as high as 180 per cent per annum on the actual capital invested, we may look with equanimity upon the result which its officers anticipate, and even if its profits should be cut in two and its stockholders forced to be content with a paltry 90 per cent per annum, they would find difficulty in gathering a sympathetic audience to listen to their tales of the Democratic purpose to ruin business enterprises.

UMBRELLA RIBS.

Paragraph 39. Umbrella and parasol ribs and stretchers were carried in the Dingley law at 50 per cent ad valorem. The Payne bill, as introduced and as it passed the House, reduced the rate to 35 per cent ad valorem; but the old rate was restored in the Senate. The duty has always been absolutely prohibitive, and even the rate fixed originally in the Payne bill, while a considerable reduction, would have been equally effective to prevent competition with the American manufacturers. The American production amounts to about $1,000,000 per annum, while the imports in recent years have never exceeded $19,000 and have generally run much below that figure. These umbrella ribs constitute a very material and important part of the finished article and are sold in bundles of eight dozen each, which is intended to represent the material for one dozen umbrellas. The statement of the trade is that the actual cost of manufacture in the largest and best-equipped plant in the country, using the most modern machinery known, is a trifle less than 80 cents per bundle. For this product the average price which the manufacturer is able to obtain in the market is $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents.

The foreign competitors are principally Germans, and the average prices f. o. b. Hamburg or Antwerp, including packing of the various sizes produced by five German manufacturers, is 60% cents. It will thus be seen that the proposed duty of 30 per cent will just about cover, on the average, the American excess in cost of production, and the domestic manufacturer, having the advantage over his foreign competitor resulting from his proximity to his market and the consequent lower transportation charges, should be able to retain almost the entire domestic consumption for his own market, while such parts of the country as can be reached by the foreigner at less transportation cost than the American manufacturer can reach the same will have the benefit of a reduced price in the commodity for that reason.

It is urged by the American manufacturer that the customers being few and taking their product in large quantities would take advantage of the slightest reduction in the foreign price to buy cheaper abroad than what the Americans could sell for, but it is apparent that this fear results from consideration of the remote possibility of the German being able to reduce his production cost so as to permit him to sell at a less sum than the present prevailing prices. This commodity undoubtedly presents one of the cases where a considerable reduction of the duty would have a serious effect upon American manufacturers, it being an article of comparatively small consumption and produced by a small number of manufacturers. rate should therefore be made such as will produce not destructive competition throughout the entire American market, but some competition in portions of the American market where the consumer is now compelled to pay larger prices than he would if foreign competition existed. An added reason for re-fusing to lower the duty to a rate far below the difference in cost of production at home and abroad arises from the fact that while the frame constitutes a material part of the finished umbrella, it does not bear any such large relation to the final cost to the consumer as would ordinarily be expected. The covering, whether of silk or of other material, and the middlemen's and dealers' profits result in prices to the consumer which would doubtless be little lower by a drastic cut in the duty on the frames. The rate is therefore laid at 30 per cent in the belief that it will result in sufficiently increased importations to make the gain in revenue worth while without so materially increasing competition with the American manufacturer as to interfere with his chance to gain a fair return upon the capital invested in the industry.

CONCLUSION.

This bill is presented in the confident expectation that it will become a law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the gentleman will be disappointed.

I think the gentleman will be disappointed. Mr. PALMER. I still hope not. The record of the other branch of the Congress in respect to the metal schedule is such as to inspire more than a hope that this revision of that schedule will receive favorable consideration there. Cummins amendment, ingrafted on the cotton bill last summer, presumably embodied the ideas of the only section of the Republican Party to whom the public can look for assistance toward any relief from tariff taxation. The pending bill does not travel far enough beyond the destination of the Cummins amendment to frighten the supporters of that proposition from journeying to the limit fixed in this measure. If that particular section of the Populiscon Party will be a section of the section o section of the Republican Party will now accept this oppor-tunity for placing on the statutes one of the great changes in the tariff law which some of their most important and able leaders have so strongly and loudly urged, if they will now permit the sound of their preaching to be silenced by the accomplishment of that for which they have so energetically preached, they will find a united Democratic Party in that body willing also to take at least one tariff issue out of the realm of politics by putting upon the statute books this legislation, so written as to be well calculated to remain there even through the travail of a change of administration.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know to whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers-

Mr. PALMER. I hope, for the gentleman's sake, that I am referring to him among others. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. If that be the case, and it is desired by gentlemen on the other side to secure votes on this side, does not the gentleman think that you ought to give us a chance to examine the bill, to have it discussed and learn something about it, and not ask us to come here blindfolded, put our faith in our pockets, and pray to God that the Democratic leaders will land us safely at last? [Laughter,]
Mr. PALMER. I trust that the gentleman from Minnesota has learned something about it to-day.

Mr. MILLER. I am glad to say that I have listened to every word of the gentleman's remarks and been much interested. I have enjoyed it. I have no doubt he has examined into all the subjects, but I have a little curiosity myself to look up and see if all the things that the gentleman has said are true. I frankly confess that I hoped this measure would be brought in in a way in which it might receive my own support, but I think it is asking an awful lot to ask us to vote upon this measure after a discussion of only five hours. I would like to inquire why it is that gentlemen on that side are afraid of the light of day thrown on your bill?

Mr. PALMER. That is an assumption which the gentleman from Minnesota has no right to make. This bill has been public since last Monday morning.

Mr. MILLER. Since yesterday. Mr. PALMER. The bill was given to the public last Monday, given to the Members on that side of the House, and Republican Members talked to me about it on Monday morning, having seen it. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota, who is so anxious for light, did he go to get a copy on Monday, or when did he think it wise to take it up and study it?

Mr. MILLER. I did not, because the bill bears date of yesterday, and I never saw it before that time.

Mr. PALMER. That is a quibble, and the gentleman knows it is a quibble.

Mr. MILLER. I did not know where I could get a copy of it. Mr. PALMER. On my left is a gentleman interested in the bill who wanted to study it, and he accepted the opportunity we gave to you, to see every line of this measure, and all the information the Democratic Party gave to the caucus was available to the gentleman as long ago as last Monday, and if the gentleman from Minnesota had taken the time from Monday until to-day to study the bill he would have had more time to study the steel and iron schedules than we had given us when the Payne law was passed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER. Unfortunately, I was not permitted to enter the Democratic caucus.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has properly described his absence. It was his misfortune.

Mr. MILLER. When was it that the Committee on Ways and Means presented to the House the report which contains the information on this bill?

Mr. PALMER. I said that was a quibble. Mr. MILLER. Did it not come in to-day?

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman knows, if he has kept track of business, that this bill and accompanying information, with the rates fixing the amount of imports upon every schedule and paragraph, the rates fixed by the Payne law, the rates fixed by the Dingley law, the rates fixed by the Wilson law as it passed the House and as it became a law, were given to the public, and would have been given to the gentleman from Minnesota if he had asked for it, nearly a week ago. His present anxiety to learn about this bill, accompanied by his confession that he made no effort to see this data before yesterday, shows that it is simply for political purposes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the bill before us is precisely the same bill as that submitted to the Democratic caucus?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I did not think my friend from Ohio would quibble about that. There is one item——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman if it was exactly the same bill submitted to the Democratic caucus. I am not quibbling, but asking a question.

Mr. PALMER. This is the same bill, with the exception of about three words.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude.

Nothing these the President has said need deter him from Nothing that the President has said need deter him from giving executive approval to the measure. Nothing that he action later as political exigencies at the time seemed to require; certainly no declaration of his would seriously plague him if he were to change his attitude, when the change would be effective for public good. In his annual message to Congress on December 6, 1910, the President said that—

The halt in business and the shock to business due to the announcement that a new tariff bill is to be prepared and put in operation will be avoided by treating the schedules one by one as occasion shall arise for a change in the rates of each.

We have met his desire in this regard by presenting this single schedule revision, and if any other schedules are added elsewhere, the responsibility for thus inviting executive disapproval will not rest upon us. It is to be earnestly hoped that the President's approval of the single schedule plan of revision will appeal to the friends of revision in the Senate, and that his agreement therein with the Democratic program will not cause any partisans in that body, for political or other purposes, to flinch from their frequently expressed intention to revise this schedule when opportunity should offer. But the President rather ominously adds:

And only after a report upon the schedule by the Tariff Board com-petent to make such report.

His designation of the august power for whose ukase we are to wait is so indefinite and indeterminate, as if he were quite uncertain as to what body he would ultimately expect to furnish a report to satisfy his craving for knowledge—"the Tariff Board competent to make such report "-that we have high hopes he may sign this bill with the light that is before him from sources that are constitutional.

Undoubtedly the arguments for delay until an executive Tariff Board shall report have less merit with respect to the metal schedule than any other in the tariff law.

The elaborate reports of the British, German, and American iron and steel associations, the publications of the Geological Survey, the detailed customs statistics, the extensive technical literature, the innumerable reports of reliable experts after critical examination of plants in this and other countries, like Pepper's report on the British and German iron and steel industry, the open and public method of all steel and iron producers in publishing not only prices prevailing here and abroad for all forms and stages of production, but costs of every step as well, the reports of the Bureaus of Manufactures and of Labor in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the sworn testimony of nearly every expert in the trade given in recent years before legislative and other bodies digging for the bottom truth, supply a fund of information, with a fullness of detail not possible to obtain in respect to any other industry in the country.

To digest this information, tabulate the statistical data, and arrange the whole in systematic and scientific correlation for a proper understanding of the facts is the legitimate work of expert statisticians. To draw inferences and conclusions from the figures so arranged and the facts so presented is properly within the exclusive province of the body charged by the Constitution with the duty of converting those inferences and conclusions into the concrete law of the land.

The work of no tariff board, either advisory to the Executive or auxiliary to the legislative branch of the Government, will add to the sum of knowledge now available for the writing of a law to revise the metal schedule, whether the purpose be to establish a prohibitive or a competitive system of rates. The task of assembling the information already at hand is not of sufficient magnitude to justify the expense of maintaining the present so-called Tariff Board or to warrant a continuance of the unsettled conditions due to waiting for the result of its extremely deliberate investigations.

Let the President be assured that the necessary facts are now available and that the clerical force to assemble them has been active in the assistance of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and he may conclude that the "Tariff Board competent to make such report" is that organization which since the foundation of the Government has been charged with the duty of preparing the legislation which the Constitution declares shall originate in this House.

If this bill shall become a law, we express the confident belief that it will stimulate industrial development by a reduction in prices of materials which enter largely into every phase of our present-day business activities; it will injure no legitimate manufacturing operation by reducing profits below a fair return upon honest capitalization, and it will secure to labor a nearer approach to its fair share of the earnings to which it contributes so large a part. It will do these things without material sacrifice of revenue for governmental purposes, indeed, without any loss of revenue, and it will prove the industrial equity, the ever has said in the past has deterred him from taking such economic justice, the social benefit, and the fiscal honesty of a tariff for revenue only. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask how much time has been consumed upon this side?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and 55 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from New York to consume an equal amount of time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great pleasure to the very eloquent speech of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], and I wish now to give him credit for the honesty, the frankness, and the courage with which he has advocated in this presence the abolition of the protective system in this country and the substitution in its place of the system of free trade. Upon no other possible ground could he have justified the provisions of the pending bill. I regret that he did not undertake to justify its introduction at this particular time, and to justify further the very extraordinary method by which it is being considered.

Mr. Chairman, Schedule C of the tariff law deals with metals and the manufactures of metals. It is popularly known as the iron and steel schedule, but any such definition falls far short of denoting its scope and its importance. It deals not only with iron and steel, but with every metal known to commerce and industry—gold, silver, copper, zinc, lead, brass, bronze, tin, antimony. It deals not only with the production of these metals, but it deals with the manufacture of them, and of every one of them. These manufactures are of infinite variety and importance. They include articles of luxury, of comfort, of convenience, of necessity. Their uses enter into every condition of individual life, and to the ends of government, offensive and defensive. Their range is large; from the armored plate of a battleship, that symbols our sovereignty upon the seas, to the needle in the hands of the sewing girl. They furnish the tools of industry and the machinery of production, as well as the means of their transportation and distribution.

Our metal-manufacturing industries are first in magnitude of all our manufacturing industries. They have more capital invested, more men employed, and at higher wages than any other industry. They enter more universally and intimately into the causes and maintenance of prosperity and contentment than do any other material factors. I believe that I would amaze some of the gentlemen who are now within the sound of my voice if I should call their attention to the items that are included in Schedule C outside of the mere manufactures of iron and steel. For instance, take artificial limbs. Did any gentleman here, until his attention was called to it, suppose gentleman here, until his attention was called to it, suppose that the manufacture of artificial limbs was covered by the metal schedule? It is a small industry, having 104 establishments, with a capital of $442,206. But it employs an average number of 342 wage earners. Their wages amount to $221,913 and its output to $883,731 a year. There are many such. I might run through this schedule and point out to you various industries, some large, some small, of which I assume many of you have not heretofore heard, or at all events have not regarded as being placed in this metal schedule, but I shall not stop to do it. I will insert a table which enumerates them. There are 83 of them in all, big and little, with a number of establishments of 21,650, with a capital stock of $3,157,388,329, employing on an average 1,171,824 wage earners, with wages amounting to $652,109,633 annually, and with an output annually of $3,130.253,195. The figures that I give you are the census figures of 1905. These figures may very well be added to by at least 25 per cent. It is perfectly apparent, therefore, that any legislation affecting these industries must be of farreaching and supreme importance, and that its wisdom or unwisdom will depend upon its relation to their well-being. And it is equally manifest that such legislation ought to be unprejudiced, deliberate, intelligent, and founded upon knowledge.

Phenomenal progress has been made in our metal industries during the last 40 years. For instance, in 1864 we made of pig iron, which lies at the base of our steel industry, barely 1,000,000 tons. In 1910 we made over 27,000,000 tons, and that is more than all the world produced 21 years ago. What is true of pig-iron production is true relatively of other items covered by the metal schedule—iron rails, steel rails, tin plate, structural steel, and so on.

It is easy of demonstration that all of this progress was made under and by reason of a protective tariff. The people of this country know that their industrial progress and prosperity has come from that source, and for that reason the policy of the country has been, and I venture to say will continue to be, a policy of protection. For I verily believe that in any contest between parties, the one advocating the policy of protection and the other that of free trade or tariff for revenue only, the latter will inevitably go to the wall.

Now, I assert at the start that no reason has been shown or can be shown why there should be a lowering of the duties in Schedule C at this time. Pursuant to a pledge made in the Republican platform in 1908 there was a revision of the tariff in the Sixty-first Congress. That revision is our present law. That revision was made after the most thorough investigation known to our tariff history. The testimony adduced through months of patient hearings constitutes the most complete compendium of knowledge upon the subject of our industries possible to be secured unless by a process of scientific research.

The Payne bill was no sooner on the statute books than it was made the subject of assault. No tariff bill, in my judgment, was ever so unjustly assailed. It was not, however, assailed equally all along the line. It was said that the wool schedule was indefensible. It was said that the cotton schedule was indefensible, but I know of no general popular complaint as to any other schedule in the tariff law. Certainly it has never been shown, and it can not be shown now, that a single item of the metal schedule has been raised in price, or commands any extravagant price by reason of the tariff. Metal products are as cheap in this country to-day as they are in any country on the face of the globe, and some of them are much cheaper than anywhere else in the world. But, however that may be, the metal schedule was cut by the Payne bill to the bone. The revision of that schedule by the Payne bill was most drastic in its character.

The truth is that the complaints against the Payne bill were not so much against the rates as they were against the method by which the bill was alleged to have been framed. Those complaints were voiced, perhaps, better in a paragraph which I will read to you from the North American Review than they were voiced anywhere else. It reads thus:

were voiced anywhere else. It reads thus:

The methods by which tariff bills are constructed have now become all too familiar, and throw a significant light on the character of the legislation involved. Debate in the Houses has little or nothing to do with it. The process by which such a bill is made is private, not public; because the reasons which underlie many of the rates imposed are private. The stronger faction of the Ways and Means Committee of the House makes up the preliminary bill, with the assistance of "experts," whom it permits the industries mostly concerned to supply for its guidance. The controlling members of the committee also determine what amendments, if any, shall be accepted, either from the minority faction of the committee or from the House itself. It permits itself to be dictated to, if at all, only by the imperative action of a party caucus.

That was written by the then president of Princeton University. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] That is what he thought he thought at the time he wrote it; what he thinks about it now I do not know [laughter and applause on the Republican side], since the gentleman in the meantime has become distinguished as the most expert lightning change artist whoever by his antics contributed to the joy of a political vaudeville. [Applause on the Republican side.] But he was not alone. The newspaper press, the magazine press, manufacturers' associations, merchants' associations, of all classes entered upon a crusade upon Congress for the creation of a Tariff Commission. They said that Congress was not competent to make a tariff bill. They said that the testimony adduced before the Committee on Ways and Means was likely to be testimony in the interest of "the interests," that the making of tariff rates was a scientific process, and that no fair tariff bill would ever be made until an expert board was secured which should take up the matter and deal with it impartially and in a scientific way.

Members of the House of Representatives from various sections of the country introduced bills providing for a Tariff Commission. All of those bills went to the Committee on Ways and Means, and as a result out of them finally was evolved a bill which authorized the President to appoint a bipartisan Tariff Board whose duty it should be to examine into the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad and kindred subjects, and make its report to Congress and to the President, as a basis upon which to make a scientific tariff bill. That bill was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously. No member of that committee, Republican or Democrat, raised his voice in dissent. It was considered upon the floor of the House, it was advocated and indorsed by the then leader of the Democratic Party, the now honored Speaker of this House; it was indorsed by the then ranking Member of the Committee on Ways and Means, now the distinguished leader of his party on the floor of this House; and it was indorsed by other distinguished gentlemen of the Committee on Ways and Means. It went from this House to the Senate. It was debated and considered in the Senate, and passed the Senate with an immaterial amendment. It came back to this House only to fail in the dying hours of the session by reason of a Democratic fillbuster, led by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Fortunately, however, Congress had made an appropriation to be used by the President for the purpose of ascertaining the same facts, getting the same knowledge, the same information, that was intended to be secured by the tariff board bill which failed. The President appointed a bipartisan board. That board went to work to execute its functions,

What, I ask you, under those circumstances, had the people of this country the right to believe? Did not every manufacturer, every merchant, ever dealer, have a right to invest his capital and maintain his business upon the assumption that existing conditions would remain, and that they would remain until a report should be made by that board? Had not the country a right to believe that for a time there would be an end to tariff agitation, the forceful and mischievous cause of business unrest and depression, that there would be an end of all tariff legislation until this board should have performed its duty and made a report? There is no other answer possible than an answer in the affirmative.

And if the people had a right then to believe there would be no further tariff agitation or tariff revision until the Tariff Board had reported, how much more have they a right now to believe it? That Tariff Board made a report upon the wool schedule. It is the most exhaustive, comprehensive, illuminating report of its character that was ever made. And the people have a right, in view of the justification of the appointment of that board by its work, now to rely upon the stability of tariff conditions until schedule by schedule they shall be adjusted in accordance with the information reported to Congress by the

If it be true, then, as I have stated, that Schedule C is the most far-reaching and comprehensive of all our tariff schedules; if it be true, as I have also stated, that its duties have been reduced to the lowest point by the Payne revision, and if it be further true that there exists a Tariff Board charged with the duty of making an examination in a scientific way of the facts relating to this schedule, then I ask you what justification is there for the presentation of this bill at this time?

It can not be justified on the ground that the Committee on Ways and Means now has any information that the Committee on Ways and Means that made the present law did not have. They Lave no further light; they have had no public hearings; they have given audience to no person interested in the items in this schedule. To each applicant a deaf ear has been turned. The bill was made in private, made by the majority members of the committee, without consultation with the minority. Of that I do not complain, because that has been a custom that has existed for a great many years in the making of tariff bills. But never before has the minority of the committee been denied the right to take on the floor of this House the judgment of their colleagues upon amendments to be presented to the bill. This bill was framed by three expert gentlemen, members of a subcommittee-the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], a tariff expert of large experience I doubt not; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], another tariff expert of equally large experience; and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON], still another tariff expert of equally large experience.

I might concede the ability of these gentlemen and their knowledge, but sometimes even Homer nods. These three gentlemen reported this bill to the full committee. bers of that committee had anything at all to do with the framing of any paragraph in the bill? How much does any one of them know about it. The truth is the bill was approved in a perfunctory way by the majority of the committee upon the report of these three members. And, then, before being sub-mitted to the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means, before being given to the public, it was submitted to a Demo-cratic caucus. It was indorsed by the caucus without debate and as a matter of course. To-day there is not a man on that side of the aisle that dare vote his convictions upon any single paragraph of this bill. Its consideration in the House at this time is a farce. It is of a mere perfunctory character. This is legislation by caucus, and legislation by caucus is totally inconsistent with our ideas and theories of representative governnent. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that up to the present moment this bill has not even been read, either in the committee or in the House.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true. This bill was not read to the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee when yesterday morning they were invited into the committee room.

It has not yet been read in this House. It matters not, however, whether it is read or not, because, as we were notified by the chairman of the committee when we met in the committee room, it made little difference whether we had general debate or five-minute debate, as in any event the bill was to be passed, pursuant to the decree of a Democratic caucus, without the crossing of a "t," the dotting of an "l," or the change of a punctuation point. And I repeat, because I think the country ought to know it—I repeat, there is not a man on that side of the House to-day that dares vote his conviction upon a single paragraph of this great bill, so largely affecting the interests of this country, because for representative government you have substituted government by caucus. [Applause] on the Republican side.]

Now, the Committee on Ways and Means had no additional information over that which the committee which made the present law had, and therefore there is no justification for the presentation of this bill at this time.

But in one respect I ought to say they did have additional information. They had the information to be gained from the operations of the present law, from its effect upon imports in their relation to our industries. The operation of the present law, so far from justifying the introduction of this bill at this time, shows that the duties of Schedule C under the Payne revision have already been cut so low as to operate to the disadvantage of our own people and to the advantage of people abroad.

Let me call your attention to the situation on the Pacific past. Under the operation of the Dingley law, for the year coast. ended June 30, 1909, there was not imported on the Pacific coast a single ton of iron ore. Under the operation of the Payne bill there were imported 24,910 tons, a small amount, but indicative of the effect of the Payne revision upon our industries. Of pig iron, spiegeleisen, and so forth, for the year ended June 30, 1909, under the Dingley law there were imported 18,610 tons; under the operation of the present law there were imported 48,247 tons.

Scrap iron and steel are small items, but of bar iron, a large item, there were imported, for the year ended June 30, 1909, under the operation of the Dingley law, 667,779 tons; but under the operation of the present law there were imported 5,385,255 tons.

And so on. I might go down the whole line, but I will give these figures in detail a little further on.

Of steel ingots, blooms, and billets there were imported during the year ending June 30, 1909, under the operation of the Dingley law, in round numbers, 6,000,000 tons; but under the operation of the present law there were imported 48,000,000 tons-eight times as much; 800 per cent of an increase over the importations in that important manufacture-important to the domestic manufacturer. In other words, there were imported in the year 1911 on the Pacific coast alone an increase of importations over those of the year 1909 of $1,386,877, or over 153 per cent. That is to say, in plain language, men of other climes furnished us $1,833,000 worth of material, of products, that ought to have been made in American workshops by American workmen-that had the Dingley law remained in force would have been made in American workshops by American workmen. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Oh, how does my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] answer that? Why, he says the figures look large, but the percentage is small. Would not that be a poor consolation to the American workingman, wandering the streets of San Francisco, whose job has been taken from him by the work of a foreigner?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. By a Chinaman, for instance. Mr. DALZELL. We have the material, we have the skill, we have the labor, we have everything that is necessary to supply the American public with what these foreigners supply to the American public to the extent of $1,833.000, and just in so far as labor contributed to that product of $1,833,000, just to that extent were American workingmen robbed of an opportunity to work at an American wage.

It is perfectly apparent that, so far as our Pacific coast is concerned, our iron and steel manufacturers are without any adequate protection under existing law. What their condition will be should this measure in the interest of the foreigner become a law it is easy to foresee. And when the rapidly growing industries of the Orient—the products of Chinese coal, Chinese ore, and Chinese labor-shall grow to maturity our condition will be still more deplorable. And more deplorable still when the furnaces of England and Germany and Belgium and France shall enjoy the advantage of cheap direct-water car-riage through the Panama Canal. There will then be an end to the consumption of American metal products on our western

And cui bono? Did any consumer of these imported products enjoy any benefit by way of reduced price? Not at all—not to the extent of a single farthing.

Comparison of imports of iron and steel at Pacific ports under Dingley law and under Payne law.

But there is nothing exceptional in this California experience. I advance this proposition, and I challenge its successful denial, that on every leading article in Schedule C the duties are so low that on every leading article in Schedule C the duties are so low as to permit the substitution of foreign-made goods for homemade goods. I repeat that: On every single article embraced in Schedule C the duties of the present law are so low as to permit the substitution of foreign goods for goods of home manufacture; and I will prove it to you. I will give you only a few examples, because I shall publish in the Record full proof of what I have said.

Here is pig iron. And by the way, any person who knows anything about the condition of American industries knows that at the present time, and for some months preceding, pig iron has been manufactured in the United States and sold at a loss because of foreign importations.

During the last two years of the operation of the Dingley law there was imported into the United States pig iron of the value of $0,000,000. During the two years of the operation of the present law there has been imported into the United States pig iron to the value of over $11,000,000. So $11,000,000 worth of pig iron made abroad has taken the place of $11,000,000 worth of pig iron that should have been made at home. The same is true with respect to scrap.

In the last two years under the Dingley law there was an importation of scrap to the amount of $274,975; but under the operations of the present law there was imported in the last two years scrap to the amount of $1,804,000, or nearly $2,000,000 worth, of foreign manufacture, which, of course, took the place of what ought to have been produced at home. After all, this question of tariff is a question of wages and labor. If you so put down the duties as to compel the American manufacturer to operate at only a bare living rate, the disadvantage will not come out of his pocket entirely. It must be shared, in whole or in part, by his labor.

The total of importation of steel ingots in the last two years of the Dingley bill was $3,959,000. The importations in the last two years of the operation of the present law amount to last two years of the operation of the present law amount to over $7,000,000. And so, as I say, I am going down the whole line. It is not worth while to take up the attention of the committee by reading these figures. I shall put them in the RECORD, and they will demonstrate what I have said. They will demonstrate the truth of my proposition that on every item in Schedule C the operation of the present law is such as to deprive our home people of an opportunity to make these things which the foreigner is enabled to send into and sell in our markets.

That is the purpose of this bill, declared by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] who preceded me. But it was unnecessary that he should make any such declaration. If you will turn to page 96 of the caucus print of this bill you will find that the estimates of import for a period of 12 months under this proposed bill amount to $77,952,000, or nearly $78,000,000, whereas the imports for the year 1911 under the present law amounted to $53,036,199. Or, in other words, this Committee on Ways and Means openly proclaim when they frame this bill that it is their purpose to increase importations into this country under this one single schedule of our tariff law to the extent of $25,000,000.

Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] says $25,000,000 sounds big, but the percentage is small. But all the same, whatever the percentage may be, it remains true that $25,000,000 worth of goods, that we have the material, the skill, and the labor to make, will be replaced by goods made in foreign factories and by foreign workmen.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] arguesand that is the only ground upon which this bill could be sustained at all, and it can not be sustained on that ground-that these duties are imposed for revenue. The Democratic Party is a party for revenue only! Now, let us see. At the same time that it is proposed to increase importations to the extent of $25,000,000, it is proposed to decrease unportations to the extent of $25,000,000, it is proposed to decrease our annual revenues to the amount of $1,600,000. Oh, this is a nice party for revenue only! Let us look back a little. They passed a reciprocity measure which, if it had become a law, would have taken $5,000,000 annually out of the United States Treasury. They passed a free-list bill, so called, that would have taken anywhere from $16,000,000 to $60,000,000 annually out of the United States Treasury.

They passed a wool bill that, according to their own con-fession, would have taken a million and a half dollars out of the United States Treasury, and now this party for revenue only proposes to take an additional slice amounting to $1,600,000 annually. In other words, adding up all the performances of the party for revenue only, we will have taken out of the Federal Treasury anywhere from $23,000,000 to $68,000,000 a

My friend from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] tells me that I have overlooked another of the enormities of the tariff-for-revenue-only party, to wit, the cotton bill. I do not recollect how much the cotton bill took out of the Treasury, but I will ven-ture the assertion that it took something, and whatever it was must be added to the $23,000,000 to $68,000,000 that they have provided for as the annual Treasury deficit.

Now, I do not wish to examine in detail the various paragraphs in this bill for the purpose of showing you that it is a measure destructive of American industries, for three reasons:

First and foremost, because the duties of the Payne bill were intended to be so levied, upon the evidence produced, as to equalize the difference in cost between production at home and abroad.

Second, because, as I have demonstrated to you, the duties under the present law are not so adjusted as to be protective of our industries at home and to equalize the difference of cost of production at home and abroad.

Thirdly, and principally, because the bill on its face is nonprotective, and my colleague from Pennsylvania, who preceded me, so announced, and said that it has no reference at all to or care for American industries; that it is drawn along lines simply for revenue only.

I have shown you, as far as that is concerned, that the bill is utterly indefensible.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I will. Mr. HARDY. I understand the gentleman to object to the bill because it will admit $25,000,000 more of foreign products into the country than now comes in?

Mr. DALZELL. I do. Mr. HARDY. Would not any bill that reduced the duties below the prohibitive point be followed by increased importations?

Mr. DALZELL. I have sought to show that there was no justification for this bill at this time, because under existing law, under the law that existed prior to the existing law, there was a large number of importations, and that the existing law reducing the duties on our industries increased the importations; and this bill is a step still further in that direction—the robbery of American workmen in favor of the foreign workmen. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. HARDY. Will not the gentleman answer my question?

Would not the reduction below the prohibitive point increase importations?

Mr. DALZELL. Theoretically, I should say, yes; but that was not our experience under the Wilson bill. The reduction of duties under the Wilson bill did not increase importations, contrary to the book theory of the subject.

Mr. HARDY. Would not the reduction of duties below the prohibitive point result in increased importation, is my question.

Mr. DALZELL. Every reduction of duty on an American product shows an increased importation until you get to free trade, when our markets will be at the mercy of the producers of the world.

Mr. HARDY. Now, one other question: Is the gentleman opposed to any reduction of duties?

Mr. DALZELL. I am opposed to any reduction of duties that is not fairly protective to American industry and to American labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman consider a duty protective when it is less than one-half of 1 per cent on the consumption of the country?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, that depends on circumstances; and depends on a number of circumstances. It would be impossible to give a categorical answer to that question.

Mr. HARDY. What proportion-

Mr. DALZELL. I do not propose to be cross-examined by the gentleman from Texas; I have answered his question. Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

BARTLETT. Does the gentleman regard the present law and the Dingley law, so far as this industry is concerned, as protective of that industry?

Mr. DALZELL. I regard the present law as intended to protect all of the industries of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am speaking of this particular industry.
Mr. DALZELL. Yes; it was intended to protect them.
Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman believe that this country can produce the articles embraced in this schedule cheaper than they are produced abroad?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; with one exception, and that is wages. If you will reduce the wages of the American workman to the wages of his colleague on the other side of the water, whether in England, Germany, or France, then we can produce as cheaply as they can.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact that having the American wages as they are now and the European and foreign wages as they are now we produce the articles in this schedule more cheaply than they are produced abroad?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think so.
Mr. HILL. Refer the gentleman from Georgia to the report of the Tariff Board which is just out.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

PALMER, The gentleman recognizes Charles M. Mr Schwab

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I was about to ask that question myself. The purpose of my inquiry was to ask that particular question. Mr. Schwab, before the committee investigating the steel corporation, stated in New York on the 8th day of August, in answer to inquires by members of the committee, that this country could produce these steel products here more cheaply than they could abroad, notwithstanding the cheaper wage scale abroad.

Mr. PALMER. Just as cheaply. Mr. DALZELL. I would answer that by saying that the evidence does not justify Mr. Schwab in his statement, if he made any such statement.

Mr. BARTLETT. He made it. Mr. DALZELL. I should be very careful to accept the testimony of Mr. Schwab or the testimony of my old friend Mr. Carnegie on this subject.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not put Mr. Carnegie forward. Mr. DALZELL. I am glad the gentleman did not. Mr. PALMER. The gentleman thinks that Mr. Schwab was speaking in what he is fond of calling "an optimistic vein"? manufactures of the United States Steel Co.:

Mr. DALZELL. I know Mr. Schwab. I think he is exceedingly able and quite competent to take care of himself under all circumstances

Mr. PROUTY. Is it not also a fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] said that Mr. Schwab did not agree with Mr. Carnegie in that statement?

Mr. DALZELL. I believe that he did make that statement. There is this to be borne in mind, and that is suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] and by the citation of Mr. Schwab and Mr. Carnegie. There are two sets of steel industries in this country. One of them is represented by the United States Steel Corporation and the other by the independent steel manufacturers. These stand on entirely different bases. I do not know but that it may be true that the United States Steel Corporation can live to-day without any tariff upon many of its products. It would be reasonable to suppose so, because the United States Steel Corporation owns all of the raw material from the ore in the ground up to the finished product, and on each and every process from the taking of the ore out of the ground to the making of pig iron and the making of billets and the rolling of rails it makes an independent profit. It may very well be that the United States Steel Corporation can conduct its business without any tariff, or at least without a high tariff, but the independents stand on an entirely different basis. They are owners, as a rule, of only a single process. They have to buy their raw material. The pig-iron manufacturer has to buy his ore, and he makes no profit on that. All the profit that he makes is on his pig iron. The independent steel-billet manufacturer owns neither the ore nor the pig iron, and all of the profit that he makes is on his billets.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.
Mr. HARDY. If these independents now have to compete with the United States Steel Corporation, which can compete with the foreign manufacturers, would they be any worse off if the foreign manufacturer, who can not produce any cheaper, were admitted also to compete with them?

Mr. DALZELL. Pass this bill and neither the United States Steel Co. nor the independents will be able to compete with foreigners. If you put the United States Steel Corporation in a position where it can make all the iron and steel in this country, then the question of tariff loses interest for the independent manufacturer.

There is an impression in this country that the United States Steel Corporation enjoys a monopoly of the product of steel made in this country. That is entirely unjustified as an asmade in this country. That is entirely unjustified as an assertion or an assumption. The United States Steel Corporation was incorporated in April, 1901. In 1902, which was the first year of its operations, it had shipments of Lake Superior ore amounting to 60.4 per cent of the total shipment, and in 1910 those objectives of Lake Superior or was reduced. those shipments of Lake Superior ore were reduced to 51.1 per cent. In 1902 the independents shipped of Lake Superior iron ore 39.6 per cent, and in 1910—last year—these same shipments amounted to 48.9 per cent. And so all along down the line. This table that I have here shows that the percentages of the manufacture of various metals by the United States Steel Co. and by the independent companies have varied from time to time; that there has been a general increase in the manufactures of the independents and a corresponding decrease in the

I verily believe that the passage of this bill, leaving cut of consideration the United States Steel Co., would do one of two things: It would either shut up all steel establishments in the United States or compel their operation upon a lower rate of wages. Now, there are some things about this

Mr. LONGWORTH. Before the gentleman leaves that point, may I ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman alluded to the testimony of Mr. Carnegie, which the gentlemen upon the other side have quoted frequently. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the statement made by Mr. Carnegie before the Committee on Ways and Means, to this effect, apropos of the steel

The time has gone past when in this great country the things that are used by the hundreds of thousands of tons of steel can be economically produced on a small scale.

Mr. Gaines, then a member of the committee, said:

Then your opinion is that the time for the small manufacturer of steel has gone by and we are to recognize the day of the large man and legislation solely with reference to him?

Mr. Carnegge. I think that is true.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; and this bill would carry out Mr. Carnegie's idea, the ruin of the little fellow. There are some things in this bill that seem to justify me in characterizing it as crude and ill digested. For example, in this caucus print of the bill you will find under each paragraph an estimate of the anticipated imports for a 12-month period. Upon what basis was that estimate made? Upon what basis can such an estimate be made? For example, you will find under the head of pig iron that the importations for 1911 under the existing law were $957,000. The estimate for a 12-month period under the proposed law is $1,500,000. Upon what basis can any gentleman here justify himself in assuming that these estimates have any other ground than guesswork? If you will follow these paragraphs one after another all through you will find that these estimates have been made, not in accordance with any standard or upon any recognized theory. They are purely from beginning to end guesswork. I submit that when you undertake to revise a tariff schedule relating to one of the great industries of this country it is dangerous to undertake it upon mere guesswork.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman from Pennsylvania put his statement in the form of a question, and may I be permitted to make an observation?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. PALMER. The average imports of pig iron during the two years that the Payne bill has been in effect are nearly $1,300,000, so that the estimated imports under the proposed bill is only an increase of about $200,000 over the average under the Payne law, while the reduction in rate is 50 per

Mr. DALZELL. Ah-

Mr. PALMER. And I will say, further, that these estimates were all fixed by an expert of the Treasury who adopted this method. He took the imports under the Dingley law for the last two years of its operation and the imports under the Payne law for the first two years and noted the increase by reason of the reduction in the Payne law and figured that a proportionate increase would result from a further reduction of the

Will the gentleman allow an interruption? Mr. HILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I see that the rate taken under the Dingley law was for 1905 instead of for the last two years.

Mr. PALMER. That is the rate which is shown here upon this caucus print that those statistics might conform to the census statistics as to production, but the estimate of the Treasury expert was based upon the last two years.

Mr. HILL. Then, the estimate of the increase or decrease of importations was not taken from the year 1905; his calculations were not made on that basis?

Mr. PALMER. No; I understand not.

Mr. HILL. Is the gentleman sure about that? Mr. PALMER." Yes.

I do not know why they put it this way. Mr. HILL.

Mr. PALMER. I have just explained that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] yield for a sort of a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The figures given to the Democratic caucus show that the production of 1910 in the United States, under the head | yield to his colleague?

of pig iron, spiegeleisen, and so forth, was $387,000,000, and that the importation that year amounted to $2,106,000. The gentleman on that side of the House charged that that tariff was practically prohibitory because with an annual production of $387,-000,000 in the United States there was only imported $2,100,000 worth. The question that I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] is whether the prohibitory form of the tariff is changed by the estimate and that the importation hereafter will be less than it has been heretofore?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly not.

Mr. PALMER. If my colleague will permit me, the rate on pig iron would be prohibitive as to a large part of the country, even if it were down to 1 per cent. You can not write a rate which would permit pig iron to compete all over the United States. The only thing you could do is to increase the area in which the foreign competition can take place. We have merely made it less prohibitive.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has not made it less prohibitive if his estimate is anywhere near correct, because he estimates smaller importation under the tariff than has actually occurred under the existing law.

Mr. PALMER. The year 1910 was an unusually large year, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that at all, and neither does the gentleman know it.

Mr. PALMER. And 1909 was a small year. Our estimate of imports are very much greater than the imports of 1911. The gentleman picks out 1910 and argues from that. I have just explained to the gentleman from Connecticut that we took the average of the two years under the Payne law.

Mr. MANN. There have been two years under the Payne Last year there was an abnormal depression in the steel trade and less importation, and yet the gentleman undertakes to say that he is changing a prohibitory tariff into a competitive tariff, and acknowledges that he expects smaller importations under the competitive tariff than have existed under the prohibitive tariff, as he says, within the last two years, showing that his estimate of importation is ridiculous.

Mr. DALZELL. I think it is very apparent, Mr. Chairman, to anyone who considers the question that it is utterly impossible to rely upon these guesses as to what imports would be should this bill become a law. I have called attention to that, and I have called attention also to the fact, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] has called attention to the fact. that while comparisons are made of the years 1910 and 1911, so far as the Payne bill is concerned, the year 1905 is selected for some reason or other as the year with which to compare the Dingley bill.

Mr. HILL. There is just one other point. The entire Dingley period was far higher than this. It averaged $17.44 instead of $14, as here, and the statement of the average is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. DALZELL. Of course it is not. And, furthermore, the figures given for production are from the Census Bureau report. The figures given of imports are from the Bureau of Statistics. The Bureau of Statistics presents the figures of the fiscal year ending June 30 each year, while the figures from the Census Bureau are for the calendar year ending December 31. It is impossible to make any accurate comparison when you are juggling with standards—one standard here and another standard there.

But the most remarkable blunder in this whole bill, as it seems to me, is the duty laid on ferromanganese. The caucus print of the bill shows that of ferromanganese we imported in the year 1910 $4,075,537 worth, and that we only produced in the United States $3,175,860 worth. And the duty under the Payne law is 6.52 per cent and under this present law 15 per cent. In other words, on a raw material that lies at the base of the manufacture of steel the duty is increased 230 per cent. Surely there were experts at work when that paragraph was put into the bill! Two hundred and thirty per cent of duty on an article of which we do not produce enough for our own consumption. Ferromanganese is produced only by the United States Steel Corporation, and only in amounts sufficient for their own needs.

Under this bill the independents, who have no means of producing this article, and do not produce it, are compelled to pay an additional duty of 230 per cent for their raw material. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] thinks that that would have no effect in increasing the prices of steel.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I do not want to be uncivil to the gentleman, but I heard his explanation, which, I respectfully submit, was no explanation at all.

Mr. PALMER. I wanted to hear the gentleman's explana-tion, and hear why he stood for even a higher rate than this when he brought the Payne bill into the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I did not. What was done in the Payne bill was to take this out from the ferroalloys paragraph in conference and to put it where it is now, subject to the duty that it

Mr. PALMER. But I am referring to the bill which the gen-tleman reported from his committee, which he assisted in passing through the House, in which he put ferromanganese in with the other ferroalloys, and which carried a much larger rate of duty than that carried in our bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I was referring to the bill which was agreed on in conference, the existing law, which, according to the gentleman's own figures, imposed a duty of 230 per cent less than the duty he puts on.

Mr. PALMER. And which was done in conference at the urgent request of the manufacturers.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know at whose request it was done, and I do not think it makes any difference. It was proper to do it.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that in the hearings that were held previous to the preparation of the Payne bill a concern located in Chicago-although I am not certain about thatasked to have a higher rate of duty put upon ferromanganese as a protective duty in order that the industry might be developed in the United States outside of its manufacture by the United States Steel Co., with the statement that if given that protection for a reasonable time they would be able to produce ferromanganese in the United States and sell it at as low a cost as it could then be obtained for by purchase

Mr. DALZELL. I must be frank with the gentleman and say

I do not recollect whether that is so or not.

Mr. MANN. I will remind the gentleman that that is the use. I have no doubt that when the committee brought the Payne bill into the House it was for the purpose of building up the industry of the protection of ferromanganese in the United States. That policy was not pursued in conference. The in-dustry has not been built up nor would the 15 per cent build it up, according to the statement of these gentlemen, but would only add to the cost of it when paid by the independents in purchasing it abroad.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, in another respect this bill seems to me crude and ill-digested, and that is in respect to the changes of classification which are made throughout the bill here and there. For example, in the billet paragraph—paragraph 9, I think it is-steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, and so forth. Under the existing law there are gradations of duty in accordance with the value of the product, and those gradations of duty were put in so as to answer to the difference in the labor cost of making the various products. It was developed at the hearings had before the Ways and Means Committee that since the passage of the Dingley law there had been established in this country a new industry, to wit, the manufacture of "high-speed steel," which had no protection at all under the Dingley law.

Now, the present law makes a provision for that; I think it is 20 per cent, although I am not sure; 20 per cent in addition to the duty on the next lower grade. Now, that high-speed steel lies at the very base of our cutlery industry in this country. A manufacturing establishment with which I have some familiarity, the Crucible Steel Co. of America, has been laboring for years under difficulties in an endeavor to develop that high-class steel industry. It has not had the protective duties that it ought to have had, though they were somewhat improved by the passage of the existing law. But now this bill has en-tirely destroyed the classification in that paragraph of the schedule, and will take away absolutely the foundation of the cutlery industry in this country. And, so far as the cutlery industry in this country is concerned, this bill cuts the duties on that one-half. There was handed to me only a few minutes ago, by a gentleman who came in here, this news paragraph, cut from a paper last night:

NEW YORK.

United States District Attorney Henry A. Wise filed suit in the Federal district court against Max Klass, an importer of German cutlery, of No. 298 Broadway, for $192,747.72 for alleged undervaluation of importations of cutlery from Germany. This is the first of a number of suits against cutlery importers that the Government has in preparation. Frauds aggregating millions of dollars will be shown, it is declared.

What chance will the Government have as against these importers under the provisions of this ad valorem law if the Government now, under a law which provides for specific duties, is suffering to the extent named in this paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the last two or three years the district attorney in New York has brought a number of prosecutions against importers in various lines, alleging that the Government had lost in the aggregate many millions of dollars, and that fact has been shown. Does not that demonstrate that the specific rates can not have any advantage over the ad valorem rates, so far as protection to the Government is concerned?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no; it does not argue that at all. It does not go to show that if the rates had been ad valorem there would not have been more undervaluations. It is very easy to show that the levying of ad valorem duties tends to undervaluations as long as human nature is what human nature is, and as long as the provisions of our tariff law for fixing valuations at the ports of entry are as they are.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One concern that imported works of art and articles of virtu voluntarily paid $1,250,000 in settlement of claims against them by the Government. It seems incredible that the frauds could have been any greater if the rate had been an ad valorem rate than they have been under a specific rate.

Mr. DALZELL. It seems incredible that they would not have been greater had the duties been ad valorem. has placed certain articles upon the free list. The first of them is cotton ties.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman passes from paragraph 9 will he yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice in various places in the report, under various paragraphs, the chairman of the committee, reporting the bill, undertakes to give the production in the United States, so that the House may have some information upon the subject of the production as it might be affected by the importations. In paragraph 9 they give a large estimated importation, or $4,000,000. I have not been able to find that they knew what the production in the United States was. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], being a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I should like to inquire of him or any other member of the Committee on Ways and Means on either side if the committee had any information before them on the subject of the production in the United States of the items covered by paragraph 9.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no such information.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman imagine that the majority side have any?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think so. I do not know where they got it unless they dreamed it.

Mr. MANN. At least, they did not furnish it to the House? Mr. DALZELL. They did not furnish it to the minority members of the committee. In fact, they furnished nothing to us except the opportunity to say a few words in general debate, and then to indorse their caucus bill. Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope you will.

Mr. DALZELL. This bill puts certain things on the free The first of them is cotton ties, in the interest of the southern planter. All I have to say to that is this, that cotton ties were put upon the free list by the Wilson bill, and the result of it was that every single cotton-tie manufacturer in the United States went out of business, and the price of cotton ties was dictated, not by home and foreign competition, but by the foreign producer.

They put some other things upon the free list. They left lead ore on the dutiable list—for a reason, I suppose—but they put zinc ore on the free list. I recall now how much wailing there was before the Committee on Ways and Means from the State of Missouri when we were discussing the question as to whether or not zinc should bear a duty. Why, the Joplin district elected a Republican and sent him to Congress to secure a duty on zinc ore. We were told that the ministers of the various churches out there were praying, Sunday after Sunday, that Congress would put a duty on zinc ore. They bewailed the fact that if we did not do so they would be put in ruinous competition with their Mexican brethren. What the gentleman's constituents in the Joplin district will do now with their Democratic Representative, whom they sent here in place of the Republican, I will not undertake to predict; but I imagine there is wailing and desolation in Joplin to-day. Rachel mourning for her children, and refusing to be comforted because they are not. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL, Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. They sent a Republican down here and they did increase the tariff on zinc.

Mr. DALZELL. They did.

Mr. RUSSELL. And he was defeated in the next election.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, and he is now dead; he is in a bad way. I will tell you one thing they did not put on the free list; they did not put agricultural implements on the free list. Six months ago the zeal on that side of the House, to help the farmer by putting agricultural implements on the free list, was something wonderful to behold. Now, when they come to make this bill, they leave them on the dutiable list at 15 per cent. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] That is the Payne rate. The rate of this bill may be higher. I am not certain about that, because I have not had time to look into it thoroughly, but unless the basket clause of the pending bill includes agricultural implements, instead of being 15 per cent they will be 25 per cent. But what amazes me is how the zeal of the Democratic to help the farmer has died down within the last six months. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I suppose they have lost any resentment that they ever had against the President for vetoing that free-list bill. But so it is, their zeal has died and the duty still remains on agricultural imple-

Now, just a word more. I have occupied more time than I had any intention to when I began.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I notice the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not mention the fact that tungsten ore was put on the free list.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; it is on the free list.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not true that the gentleman from Pennsylvania now speaking, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Palmer, stood shoulder to shoulder on that proposition?

Mr. DALZELL. Under the present law? Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. In this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I have said nothing about it. I am glad the gentleman from Colorado called attention to it, because I see that Colorado has been struck. [Laughter on the Republican

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes; that is very true.

Mr. DALZELL. I expected to hear from Missouri, but I had forgotten about Colorado.

Mr. PALMER. Which shows that we are playing no favors. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. All getting poor together. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say on behalf of the gentleman from Missouri, who represents the Joplin district, that he has indicated that he is not responsible for this bill so far as it refers to zinc. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Now, with reference to tungsten, I assume that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, now occupying the floor, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. PALMER, were in favor of free tungsten because of its use in the hardening of steel manufactured in the State from which the two gen-tlemen come. It benefits Pennsylvania while it hurts Colo-

Mr. DALZELL. May I ask the gentleman from Colorado whether the gentleman from Missouri and he will vote for this

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am going to offer an amendment to this bill. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

If the gentleman from Missouri does not avail himself of the privilege of offering the amendment that he should offer, I will offer it in his place.

Mr. DALZELL. Bold man!

Mr. MANN. Idle ceremony.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He could not have done it if the Republicans had the bill in charge.

Mr. MANN. He would not have needed to.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the worst feature of this bill, what I might call the supreme folly of this bill, is the substitution of ad valorem for specific rates. It is not possible to make any argument in favor of ad valorem rates. been abandoned by every civilized country on the face of the earth. They have been denounced by every Secretary of the Treasury, with the exception of Robert J. Walker, from Albert Gallatin to Franklin MacVeagh. Theoretically they are impossible of defense, because when they need to be highest they are lowest and when they need to be lowest they are highest. vary from day to day as the price of the commodity on which the duty is levied varies, and for that reason it is absolutely impossible to estimate what may be the income for any particular time or for any particular year. That is one of the worst features. Another feature of ad valorem duty that is absolutely impossible of defense is that they are a direct temptation to frauds upon the revenues, as all of our history shows. The report of every Secretary of the Treasury who has ever dealt with the question shows that an ad valorem duty results invariably, in spite of all precautions, in fraud upon the Treasury. And why? An ad valorem duty is a duty according to value. According to value where? In the ports of the United States or some place else? Under our tariff law there are two methods of estimating values for customs purposes. In the one case it must be the actual cost in the place of exportation. the other case it must be the ruling market price in the country from which imported. It stands to reason that in every case the burden is imposed upon the customs officer to ascertain—it may be in the heart of Asia or Africa—what was the actual cost or what was the ruling market price of the article upon which he is to estimate duty. It falls out that in many cases duties are at one rate when imposed on an article coming from one place in a country and at another rate when coming from another place in the same country.

For instance, hay imported from one of the cities of Canada will pay one rate of duty and hay imported from another city in Canada will pay another rate of duty, although the hay may be imported at the same time and by the same person, because of the variation in the price of hay at the several places from which it was imported. Ad valorem duties are antiquated, and there is no better evidence of the inexpertness with which this bill was prepared than is found in the substitution for our system of specific duties of this infamous system of ad valo-

I said awhile ago that there was no justification for this bill at this time. If you gentlemen want to try your hand at tariff revision, why do you not try it on the wool schedule? [Applause on the Republican side.] Six months ago you were anxious "to take the burden of taxation imposed by the wool schedule from the shoulders of the peepul," to adopt a phrase that runs musically murmuring through all the tariff speeches of my friend from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. Why are you not equally anxious to relieve him now? The report of the Tariff Board furnishes you the necessary information. Of what are you afraid? Are you afraid of yourselves? Are you afraid that you can not seduce another. can not seduce another Democratic Congress into smothering its convictions upon the subject of free wool? Are you afraid to encounter the antagonism of the Peerless Leader? Or, to be frank, is it not a fact that the magnificent report of the Tariff Board has convicted you of insincerity? [Applause on the Republican side.] So you sidetrack the wool schedule in answer to public clamor and to the call of the demagogue denouncing the United States Steel Corporation. You fear to face the report of the Tariff Board and you take refuge in a revision of the metal schedule. [Applause on the Republican

After all, gentlemen, there is only one issue involved here. is apparent from the speech of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], who preceded me, it is a question between the policy of protection and the policy of free trade. That is the fundamental issue upon which parties divide and that the issue upon which they must appeal to the people at the next election. You have made the issue. We on this side of the Chamber welcome it with open arms. We know that every hour of prosperity that this country has enjoyed has been because of the protective system. [Applause on the Republican side.] For years we were carried to victory under its banner, and when the contest comes again, following that same banner on which shall be emblazoned "Protection to American industries," we will appeal to the people in the full assurance that the intelligent citizenship of the United States will decide in accordance with what are their best interests. [Loud and continued applease.] continued applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Alabama remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes. Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Alabama has gone

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. [Applause.]
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the generosity of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in allotting to me such a large share of the limited time for general debate on this important measure that belongs to this side of the House. I understand that general debate is limited to five hours. There are 300 minutes in five hours, and those 300 minutes, apportioned equally among the 391 Members of the House, would give each Member 45 seconds in which to express his views upon the bill and incidentally indulge in such flights of oratory as his imagination may have in stock. In the generous amount of time allotted to me I will state some of the reasons why I intend to vote against this bill.

In the first place it is one of the most extraordinary measures, considering the circumstances under which it was prepared and brought into the House, of any that I have known during my service as a Member of this body. The bill deals with some of the most important industrial interests of the with some of the most important industrial interests of the country, industries in which there is invested more than $3,000,000,000 of capital, industries that have an annual product of over $3,000,000,000, industries that employ 1,100,000 laborers and pay them in the neighborhood of $700,000,000 of wages every year, industries that were established and have grown to stupendous proportions under the fostering influence of a protective tariff.

It is now proposed to make a radical reduction of the tariff on foreign-made competitive products under the rule of guess, with little or no regard for the status of those industries or for the welfare of the 1,100,000 men employed by them. Gentlemen on the other side of the House boast that they are opposed to the policy of protection, and their chief argument in support of every tariff bill they have brought into the House is that it carries no protection whatever to American industries or American labor. They declare that the steel and iron industries of this country need no protection, that they are strong enough to compete with the world on an equal footing, and that the duties provided in this bill are for revenue only, and yet they admit that the revenue the bill will yield will fall at least $1,500,000 below the amount collected under the same schedule in the Payne tariff. What becomes of the pretense, then, that the proposed change is exclusively for revenue, when they admit that its operation will result in a loss of revenue to the country?

The average duties fixed by the bill are 22 per cent, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] in his speech in support of the bill declared that its purpose was to put foreign and domestic iron and steel products upon a competitive basis in our markets. If Americans can and do make steel and iron products as cheaply as they can be made anywhere else in the world, how can foreign products compete in our markets under a law that taxes them 22 per cent to enter this country at all?

Is a tariff competitive when it imposes a burden upon one of the competitors as large as this bill proposes? But I do not agree with the supporters of this bill, either upon the facts or upon their theory, if they can be said to have a theory.

I am opposed to the pending bill because, among other reasons, it is impossible for anyone to determine what its effect may be upon American industries. It is constructed upon the haphazard rule, in the hope that portions of it may be right. I can not give my support to a measure so vitally affecting one of the greatest industries in the country unless I feel reasonably certain that it will not destroy that industry and precipitate a general panic. I am a firm believer in the policy of protection as expressed in the last Republican national platform. The duties on competitive articles ought to be high enough to cover the difference in the cost of production in this country and in foreign countries, but no higher. Reasonable protection should be secured to American industries, so that our factories and mines may continue to pay the high rate of wages that prevails in the United States and at the same time make a reasonable profit on the capital they have invested, but not high enough to enable them to impose unfair charges upon the consumers of their products. Protection must operate both ways. Any industry that demands or seeks a higher rate of duty than will reasonably cover the difference in the cost of production here and abroad must have in view the purpose of extorting unreasonable profits from those who buy and consume its products. With the tariff adjusted according to the Republican standard, there will be prosperity among the industries and fair and reasonable prices to the consumer.

The time has come when our tariff must be revised by rational methods. The country is altogether out of patience with the old, unscientific, haphazard method of imposing customs duties, without regard to the difference in cost of production here and in foreign countries. The guesswork rule must go. It is almost a crime for Congress, in this day of enlightenment and progress, to revise tariff duties without a careful investigation of conditions, so that legitimate industries may be secured against disastrous competition from abroad and yet not be sheltered behind a tariff so high as to enable them to mo-nopolize production at home. Under the old method, periodic agitations for drastic tariff revisions have come, always accompanied by industrial depression and often by a general panic. The industries are insecure under that method. They can not know whether the tariff adopted under the random method will be too low for legitimate production, and the consumers are always concerned lest it be too high. Under the guesswork rule Congress may guess wrong and make the rate so low as to practically destroy many great industries that employ millions of American laboring men at good wages. The time has come when this periodic agitation must cease, in so far as it can be prevented by a wise and rational method of making tariffs. Our tariff must be put upon a business basis and kept there, and this can only be done by making the duties high enough to afford domestic producers the protection they reasonably require on account of the cheap labor and cheap production in other lands. Such a tariff can only be established through the agency of an expert, nonpartisan tariff commission. The cost of production here and in foreign countries must be ascertained with practical certainty, so that not only Congress, but the people of the country, may know what rates of duties should be established.

The ascertainment of the cost of production of commodities is largely a technical question, and information concerning it can only be secured through a board or commission composed of experts along that line. Congress can not make a scientific or technical investigation of that character. It is utter nonsense to contend that Congress or any committee of Congress men can make an investigation of the costs of production that will be accurate or trustworthy. It requires time and intelligent expert study to ascertain the necessary facts. Experts must be sent to all the other great producing countries and must remain there long enough to ascertain all the reliable facts bearing upon conditions of production. Congress might as well undertake to investigate the cause and cure of yellow fever, cancer, or any other malignant disease without consulting physicians, who, by education and experience, are able to give trustworthy information upon the science of medicine.

When the tariff is established on a business basis it will be an easy matter, through the aid of a permanent tariff commission, to make such changes in the various schedules, from time to time, as may be required by the changed conditions of the methods and cost of production. This can be accomplished the methods and cost of production. without exciting any fear or apprehension in the minds of American producers. They will feel secure in the belief that whatever changes may be made in schedules, the duties will be high enough to protect them from disastrous competition from foreign countries, and the people of the country, as a body, will be content in the faith that the tariff will not be made so high as to enable industrial combinations to exact unjust prices for their products. Then, and not until then, will there be economic stability, industrial peace, and popular

The great issue now before the American people is the establishment of a permanent, nonpartisan, expert tariff commission, and the people will fight for the achievement of that end until the commission method of adjusting tariffs has come to be the fixed and established method.

The Tariff Board, appointed by President Taft, investigated the wool schedule and has submitted its report to Congress. That is the only thoroughly scientific and reliable investigation of the cost of production, relating to any tariff schedule, that has ever been made in this country. That magnificent report carries on its face evidence of its own reliability. It is a thorough, extensive, and accurate report, and it will be an easy task to revise the wool schedule so as to cover the difference in the cost of production here and in other lands. But the Tariff Board is not a permanent institution. It lives only upon annual appropriations, and it is currently reported that the Democrats in this body have determined to withhold any appropriation for the board for the fiscal year beginning the 1st day of next July. It is their deliberate intention to starve the board out of existence. They seem to be afraid to turn the light of truth upon the tariff question. It would seem that even they, fatuously following their policy of tariff for revenue only, might profit by trustworthy information. In their guess-work method of making tariffs they might guess wrong in some instance and fix the rate high enough to protect American industries, a result that would be most objectionable to all members of that party, judging from their preachments.

If it were ascertained with practical certainty that it cost the American producer 30 per cent more to produce a given line of products than it costs abroad, our adversaries would then know how low to fix the duty so that it would not afford protection to any American producer and yet be high enough to yield a large revenue. If the difference in production should be 30 per cent, they could easily arrange the duty at 20 per cent or 25 per cent on the foreign product, thereby giving the foreigner control of American markets, and the result would be a large revenue in the Federal Treasury, provided always that the people of the United States have the means to buy and consume the imported products. Trustworthy information could not put the Democrats at a disadvantage, if they are sincere in their advocacy of the revenue-only policy.

At the special session of the present Congress the Democrats seemed very anxious to revise the wool and cotton schedules. They were notified that the Tariff Board was making an investigation of those schedules and would report thereon the first of this year. They could not wait. They put through bills revising both of those schedules by guesswork, and the bills were vetoed by the President. Since then the Tariff Board has made its report upon the wool schedule, and now Congress knows with practical certainty how low the duties may be imposed without destroying American production and how high they may be placed without injustice to the American consumer. Why does not the majority side of the House bring the wool schedule up for revision in accordance with the facts contained in the report of the Tariff Board? They seem to be side-stepping that question.

The truth is, the report of the Tariff Board completely vindicates the President in his vetoes of the wool and cotton whiteless the Fresident in his vetoes of the wool and certain schedules, and they lack the candor to admit it. Will they bring in a bill for the revision of the wool schedule during this session of Congress? They are in control of the House. The minority side can not report a bill. If there shall be no revision of the wool schedule during this session of Congress the responsibility will be on the Democratic side of the House.

The metal schedule, covered by the pending bill, was quite thoroughly revised by the Payne tariff law. The duty on iron ore was reduced from 40 cents to 15 cents a ton. Steel rails were reduced from $7 to $3.50 a net ton and pig iron from $4 to $2.50, and substantial reductions were made in the duties on all steel and iron products, with very few exceptions. The Payne law did not change the wool schedule. That schedule. remains substantially as it has been for many years. Last summer the Ways and Means Committee selected the wool schedule as the one among all the schedules most needing revision. Now that they are provided with scientific information respecting conditions of production in all parts of the world, the need of revision of the wool tariff certainly is as imperative now as it was last summer. They furnish no trustworthy information respecting the metal schedule. The Ways and Means Committee has had no hearings in relation to the cost of production at home or in any place else. They summoned no witnesses and made no investigations. Who can tell what the difference in the cost of the production of steel and iron is here and abroad?

The Tariff Board, I am informed, will report upon the cotton schedule within a few days, and it will then take up the steel and iron schedules for investigation. It is impossible, with the information now before Congress, to fix duties upon steel and iron products upon a just and equitable basis. If this schedule shall be revised now, when the report of the Tariff Board is received—provided, of course, that the Democrats do not starve it out of existence-another revision, accompanied by another business disturbance, will be necessary. The people of the country are anxious to have all the tariff schedules revised, but they are not deceived by the Democratic method of slipshod revision. They expect and demand scientific revision. expect and demand a business tariff, and they would rather revision be delayed a short period and have it right than to have an unsatisfactory revision now. There is no evidence showing the difference in the cost of production here and in foreign countries, and if Congress shall adopt the pending bill for the revision of the metal schedule, without waiting for an investi-gation by the Tariff Board, it will discredit the commission method of making tariffs and postpone indefinitely the day when tariffs shall be made a business rather than a political issue.

I quote here a short editorial, printed in the Saturday Evening Post of this week, upon the Tariff Board:

The Democratic House can not afford to starve the Tariff Board. It should, on the contrary, support it liberally. The country has had more than enough of superficial, partisan, ex parte tariff investigation. It wants something different—a comprehensive, disinterested intelligent inquiry into the important facts. There is no good reason to doubt that the Tariff Board is willing and able to supply this want. No such inquiry was ever before undertaken in this country. To organize its staff and map out the groundwork cost the board months of time and a great deal of money. It is now in good running order, and, as must always be the case with every similar body, it gains in efficiency with experience. To check the board now would mean to throw away, in good part, the time, effort, and money that have been expended in organization and preliminary work, leaving all that costly work of organizing a staff and mapping out the ground to be done over again at some later day, for if this Tariff Board doesn't do it some future tariff board will. The country will not be content until it has a tariff inquiry of this scope and nature.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It having been conceded upon the floor by our friends on the other side that there were no public hearings during the consideration of this schedule, will the gentleman say whether or not it was the practice of the old Ways and Means Committee, which prepared the Payne bill, to give public hearings?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was. The Ways and Means Committee, in preparing the revision of the Dingley tariff in 1908 and 1909, held sessions for weeks and months, and took testimony covering more than 10,000 printed pages upon all questions involved in the schedules. It had the benefit of the report of the Bureau of Corporations that is referred to in the report accompanying this bill. It had the benefit of Mr. Pepper's investiga-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that not only Government experts, who were sent around the world, but also representatives of industries upon all sides and all who had information to give were invited to appear before the com-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true in a measure, and yet our evidence was discredited by many people of the country. The committee did the best it could without the aid of an expert tariff commission

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman whether or not all these hearings in regard to the Dingley bill and those in regard to the Payne bill were not published and are now accessible to anybody who desires to make an investiga-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They were published in book form and are accessible.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Another question. The gentleman said we wanted tariff legislation by the Tariff Board rather than by Congress, which latter knows nothing about the sub-Is he willing to let a tariff board, which the President, who appointed the board himself, expressly said has no expert knowledge, determine what the tariff of this country shall be?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No. I am not contending that the board should revise the tariff. The Constitution makes that the duty of Congress, and it can not be delegated to a tariff commission or to any other officer or tribunal. But the Constitution does not prohibit Congress from securing information necessary to the intelligent performance of its duties. gress has the right to create expert commissions to investigate technical subjects and furnish information necessary to wise legislation thereon. That is all there is in a tariff commission.

The present Tariff Board now has in its service numerous experts in all important commercial countries investigating industrial conditions with the view of ascertaining the cost of production of dutiable products for the enlightenment of Congress. Congress is not compelled to act upon the information furnished by the board. It may still blunder along in darkness if it so chooses, but the individual Member must answer to his constituents for his folly if he does so.

The Payne tariff was a disappointment to the country because it could not be determined with practical certainty that the duties carried in it simply covered the difference in the cost of production here and in foreign lands. That bill contained a great many beneficent provisions, but the people of the country, with a just sense of discrimination, discredited much of the evidence upon which that tariff was based. It was impossible for Congress to have made a satisfactory tariff at that time because of the want of trustworthy, expert information on the subject of the cost of production. The Payne law did, however, illustrate to Congress and to the country that it was impossible to make a business tariff for this country without the aid of a tariff commission. That experience was a necessary step toward the establishment of a scientific method of tariff making. fore the Payne revision was undertaken there seemed to be little demand for the creation of a tariff commission. The Government had been making and revising tariffs, under method, ever since it was established, and its attention had not been riveted upon the vital necessity of a tariff commission.

The Payne law did that very thing, for now nine-tenths of the people of this country are earnestly in favor of the commission method. The pending bill is a good illustration of the danger of revising a tariff now under the old method. It betrays a reckless disregard for the vital interests of the country. It shows that the Democratic majority in this body has little appreciation of the responsibility that rests upon their shoulders. Their attempts at tariff revision will be regarded by the country as evidence of their utter lack of capacity to wisely administer the affairs of this great Government.

Several years ago the Hon. John Sharp Williams, who is now a Senator in Congress from the State of Mississippi, while leader of the Democratic side in this body, on an occasion when his party colleagues were urging some radical and dangerous measure, took occasion to lecture them on the floor of the House for their recklessness. He said, "The country is tired of the Republican Party, but it is afraid of us." The latter part of Mr. Williams's statement is undeniably true. Just such measures as this excite fear and concern in the minds of the people, and as a campaign issue it will be a large factor in determining the result of the election next November.

Mr. FOWLER. As to the extent of the investigation of prices and of conditions with respect to the metal schedule, and particularly of the iron and steel schedule, I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that a special committee has been investigating that subject for six months and more, and has had before it the presidents and head authorities of this industry and has gone into that subject most thoroughly?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. If that committee has been doing all that work, I would like to see some of the fruits of its labors. They certainly do not appear in this measure.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask the gentleman if these investigations have not been made public, so that every Member of Congress can have access to them?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. I never saw a report of that kind, and never knew there was anything of that character that was accessible to all the Members of Congress. Stanley committee, I understand, is engaged in investigating monopolies, not cost of production, if the gentleman has that committee in mind.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. How would the gentleman tell the difference between the cost of production abroad and the cost of production at home when the manufacturer is continually importing cheap foreign labor?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not see what that has to do with the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The manufacturer can not import labor. That is contrary to law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As is suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the manufacturer can not import labor. I will tell the gentleman from Illinois the reason why a great many foreign laboring men are coming to the United States. because under our policy of protecting American industries and American labor they can get more for their labor here than they can at home or any other place on earth. They come here because conditions are better here. They can make more money here than they can at home, or they would not come here.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in Gary, one of the towns of his district, more than half of the men employed in the steel plant are foreigners, many of whom are so ignorant that they can not speak the English lan-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think so.

Mr. FOCHT. The fact that they can not speak the English language does not make them ignorant.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There are a number of foreigners employed in many of the industries to do unskilled work, ordinary labor, and they receive more for common labor in this country than they do for skilled labor at home. We need the men. The work must be done. A large number of people come from European countries and perform ordinary labor in this country. This increases the opportunities for skilled labor, which is performed chiefly by our own citizens. We can not have skilled labor without common labor to prepare the foundation for it.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there not as many as 80 per cent of the laborers in the Gary Steel Works who are foreign, many of whom are ignorant, cheap laborers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not ignorant or cheap. The Gary mills pay good wages—better, I will venture to say, than are paid in the district represented by the gentleman. Common laborers with shovels receive in Gary from $2.25 to $2.50 a day for their work.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask you one more question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not want my time occupied in discussing matters that have no relevancy to the bill under consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. One more question, and that is all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman will ask that question and make it short, I will answer it.

Mr. FOWLER. Are not a great number of the laborers in that institution working at 12½ cents an hour?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not.

Mr. FOWLER. And working 12 hours a day, too? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Indiana be kind enough to ask the gentleman from Illinois what particular nationality he refers to when he says that foreigners employed in the mills at Gary are so ignorant that they do not understand the English language?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not the time to go into that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he is willing to ask the gentleman from Illinois that question—what particular nationality he refers to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to prolong this irrelevant controversy.

The report submitted by the Committee on Ways and Means with the pending bill makes some reference to the cost of production in the United States, and it quotes principally the recent report made by the Bureau of Corporations, showing the cost of production of steel and iron in this country, but there is no reference to the cost of similar products in foreign coun-It only presents one side of the case. of the Bureau of Corporations, it appears that the United States Steel Corporation, with its elaborate integration, is able to make steel and iron products at a cost of from $2.50 to $4 below the cost of making the same class of products by independent establishments. This report presents a very interesting problem. If the basis of cost in this country is fixed upon the output of the United States Steel Corporation, and duties are adjusted accordingly, the result will be the closing up of practically all of the smaller independent iron and steel mills in the land. The United States Steel Corporation makes about 50 per cent of all the steel and iron produced here. The other 50 per cent of production is distributed among hundreds of smaller concerns that are not members of any combination.

If they are legislated out of existence the Steel Corporation will have no competition except that which may come from abroad. It would soon enlarge its stupendous capacity and would ultimately have a complete monopoly of the steel and iron industry in this country. If, on the other hand, the cost of production by the independent concerns should be made the basis of tariff adjustment, the duty would be high enough so those establishments could operate, pay good wages, and make a reasonable profit. Such a tariff would enable the Steel Corporation to make the same legitimate profit on its investments and in addition thereto the margin of from $2.50 to $4 a ton on its output because of the fact that it can supply its products that much cheaper. Such a tariff would give the Steel Corporation an unfair profit.

A new school of industrial economy in this country contends that large aggregations of capital and combinations of establishments are the logical result of modern industrial conditions; that they enable manufacturers to avail themselves of economies in production that result in a low cost. Abstractly that doctrine contains more than a grain of truth, but if the big combinations do not share with the people the savings in the cost of production that come from the employment of additional economies, they not only do no public good but do a positive harm to the country. It creates discontent among the people. One of the great problems before the country is what shall be done with the large combinations that practically control the prices of the necessaries and comforts of life. The Steel Corporation, producing one-half of the iron and steel in this country, is able thereby to fix the prices of the entire product. There can not be two prices for the same line of commodities. The demand of the country requires practically the combined products of the Steel Corporation and the independent concerns, and therefore the Steel Corporation, organized as it is, can determine the prices for all steel and iron products.

While I am not the champion or defender of the United States Steel Corporation, I believe I have such a sense of fairness as to be able to treat that corporation with absolute justice. I am willing to stand by it when it is right and I am equally willing to condemn it when it is wrong. If it violates the law, it should suffer the penalties of the law. Its officers and managers should be responsible under the law in their capacities as officers and managers, the same as they are and the same as every citizen is individually.

The country insists that if large combinations are to continue to control the industries the benefits resulting from large aggregations of capital and from combinations shall be shared equitably with the people rather than go altogether to increase the dividends of the stockholders. The people are entirely willing to see those large enterprises make a good profit upon their investments, but they do protest against their taking advantage of the libertles they enjoy in appropriating to themselves substantially all of the benefits that come from combination

Distinguished leaders of public thought are earnestly advo-cating the repeal of the Sherman antitrust law, thereby in effect legalizing monopolistic combinations, and of supplementing in its stead a law for the control by the Federal Government of such concerns as are engaged in interstate and foreign trade. The Sherman law denounces monopolistic combinations.

Its repeal would put many lines of industry in complete control of the combinations.

Under any system of regulation the Government might provide to keep the profits of the large concerns at a reasonable basis the smaller independent concerns would be driven out of business. If the smaller concerns could survive and make a reasonable profit on their investments, the large combinations would wax fat because of their ability to produce so much cheaper than the small ones. The repeal of the Sherman antitrust law means the placing of many lines of industry under the complete control of monopolies, subject to such regulations as the Government may be able to effect under Federal laws. The Government as a business institution is not a decided success. I believe I am safe in saying that it costs the Government from 25 per cent to 40 per cent more to conduct its own business affairs than it would cost a private concern to conduct similar enterprises. The Government has done excellent work in regulating transportation, and yet under its regulations freight costs have increased. It has, however, secured equality of rights and privileges in relation to transportation to all the people in the land.

I am not reconciled to the repeal of the Sherman antitrust law. I do not believe in eliminating competition from our industries With the Sherman law administered so as to prevent monopoly, supplemented by wise Federal laws defining specifically, as far as it is practicable to do so, the things that large industries shall not do and securing to the Government a general supervision over them in the way of requiring complete publicity of all of their affairs, and the creation of an industrial commission with reasonable discretionary authority, in my judgment will bring about the highest degree of good.

If the benefits of monopolies in the way of cheaper production go to the monopolists themselves, there is no reason, from the standpoint of the public, why monopolies should exist. Furthermore, there is some sentiment involved in the solution of the problem in this free land of ours. It seems a little humiliating to the average American to be absolutely dependent for the necessaries and comforts of life on a few large private Large concerns are not necessarily monopolies. lishment may grow and expand its business and influence to such an extent as to occupy a controlling influence, and yet if its growth is the result of its superior capacity and the excellency of its products, there can be no just cause of criticism. But if a number of concerns that have been competing with each other for the market should effect a combination for the purpose of stifling competition and thus create a monopoly, the country must of necessity look upon such a combination with some degree of concern. Competition and rational control of industries must, in my judgment, be the ultimate solution of the great industrial problem that confronts the public at this time. The Government is supreme, and its power must and will be employed for the advancement and welfare of the people generally. It will be a sad day in this country when competition among large industries shall be eliminated. The principle of competition is the basis of economic science. To that principle is due the credit for most of the progress the world has made. It is God's way of advancing civilization and His method of race building. Suppress competition and progress will stop. There will be no reward for excellence; the inventive genius will be paralyzed. It will mean the deterioration of the human race, the deadly blight of socialism.

President Taft is right in standing by the Sherman law and in advocating a Federal corporation act and other legislation for the proper regulation of interstate industries. competition is better than no competition at all. The disintegration of great monopolistic combines that are in unreasonable restraint of trade will ultimately be effected. If the decree of the courts in the Standard Oil and the Tobacco cases shall prove ineffectual, other laws and other decrees can and will be made that will as effectively compel competition among the larger establishments as it exists among the smaller ones. The solution of the problem pointed out by President Taft is the one, in my judgment, that must ultimately be adopted. In this connection, one of the first steps toward bringing about competition is the placing of the tariff upon a business basis along protective lines. That important reform can not be brought about by the enactment of such legislation as is proposed by the bill pending before the House at this time. On the contrary, its consummation will be seriously retarded. All sincere advocates of a higher and better standard of tariff laws and business methods should stand together for the great reforms that are indispensable to the accomplishment of that beneficent

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I re-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 30 minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed I ask permission to extend my remarks by inserting certain publications and tables that I desire to print in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to consume the balance of his time.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I regard this bill as the most important measure introduced in this Congress, or any Congress to my knowledge, affecting the interests of the South. This bill not only affects that section, but it vitally affects more than 25,000 industries in this country with a capitalization of more than $3,000,000,000 and giving employment to more than a million and a half of American wage earners. The most important schedule in the entire tariff system of our country is thrown upon this House with five hours of general discussion, and a majority and minority report, covering a hundred pages, submitted for the investigation of its Members on the very eve of its discussion.

You can not possibly expect a favorable consideration of this measure at the hands of the Republican Senate or to have the approval of the present occupant in the White House. [Ap-No party except one hostile to American development would dare to so recklessly deal with great problems of millions of dollars of invested American capital and reaching the homes of 1.500,000 of American wage earners.

The American people are fortunate in having at the other end of the Avenue a man who has the courage and patriotism to stand between them and the attempted wrecking of the American protective system which has developed this country until it is the marvel and admiration of every man who sits even upon the other side of the Chamber. [Applause.]

It was admitted by the chairman of the subcommittee who framed this bill that its purpose was to enlarge the market for foreign makers of the articles affected by this schedule, and to extend their zone for the shipment to and sale on the American shores of the cheap, foreign, pauper-made goods of Europe. That is the declared purpose and intention of this bill, namely, to take from the workshops of America over $20,000,000 worth of goods, and have those goods made, not by American mechanics, but by the cheap, pauper-paid laborers of Europe.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.
Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman kindly state what proportion of foreigners are employed in these industries in this

Mr. AUSTIN. The difference is this: The man of foreign birth who works in the mills here buys his food and buys his clothing here, and pays his taxes to the American Government. The foreigner you propose to support and give employment to under this bill buys his food, his clothing in, and pays his taxes to a foreign government. [Applause.]

Not only that, but we know that the great majority of the foreigners who seek America come here for the purpose of becoming American citizens, whereas the men you are favoring have shown no indication to sever their allegiance to a foreign government and cast their lot with us and take up their homes in America. If our workshops and factories are filled with foreigners, it is absolute proof that the American workingman is better paid, better clothed, and better fed than the working people of any foreign land. If you will examine the census returns you will find that more than 20,000,000 of foreign workingmen have deserted the cheap pauper-paid system of work and landed in America to be identified with a country that pays the highest known wages to mechanics and other wage earners.

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It proposes to allow American manufacturers to buy more pig iron in England, Germany, and China, and less in Alabama and Tennessee. It proposes to allow our iron makers to buy more iron ore from the mines of Cuba, Spain, and far-off Sweden and to buy less from the iron-ore producers of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and the other Southern States of the Union.

What else? This bill not only proposes to put iron ore on the free list, but it proposes also to put zinc ore on the free list. What States of the South are producing zinc? Tennessee, Arkansas, and Missouri. Why, the gentleman who has this bill in charge stated that Mr. Schwab had made an immense amount of money under the Republican protective system. Returning from Europe last summer, Mr. Schwab, the gentleman's fellow townsman, with his iron mills with cheap water transportation, stated in an interview in the New York papers that he had entered into a contract to bring to his mills 25,000,000 tons of iron ore from And this bill proposes to present to him the duty now levied of 15 cents per ton, and rob the National Treasury of more than $250,000 that is annually paid as a tax on imported iron ore.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is laboring under a very serious misapprehension if he thinks Mr. Schwab is the only importer of iron ore in this country. the duty now paid by Mr. Schwab on iron ore coming from Cuba is only 12 cents a ton, not 15. But Mr. Schwab is not the largest importer of Cuban ore. All the eastern furnaces are now getting Cuban ore, and it is going to many other consumers besides Mr. Schwab.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Pennsylvania Steel Co., Mr. Schwab, and the Maryland Steel Co. are the only heavy importers of foreign iron ore. The gentleman's constituent, Mr. Schwab, stated in an interview that he had a contract to import into this country 25,000,000 tons of iron ore from Sweden, and this bill proposes to remove that duty of 15 cents per ton on the 25,000,000 tons for which he has entered into a contract.

Mr. PALMER. Is the gentleman trying to charge that I am trying to look out for Mr. Schwab?

Mr. AUSTIN. I charge that the schedule which the gentleman prepared and which his caucus approved and which he reported and defended wipes out this duty and virtually presents to Mr. Schwab, his constituent and the largest iron producer in his district, 15 cents a ton on 25,000,000 tons of iron ore, or $3,750,000.

Mr. PALMER. Well, when Mr. Schwab has seen the pig-iron rate and the other rates in this bill he will not be as pleased and enthusiastic about it as the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say to the gentleman that when the Payne-Aldrich bill was in course of preparation here, in the Sixty-first Congress, the man whom the southern Representatives had to fight in order to get a duty on iron ore was Mr. Schwab, of Pennsylvania.

Now, let us see about the pig-iron business. The Birmingham mills have not sold, I suppose, a ton of pig iron on the Pacific coast since the recent reduction of the duty on pig iron.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend more than that, They never did.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Manufacturers' Record, a reputable paper of Baltimore, is authority for the statement that the Pacific Coast Steel Co., of San Francisco, have notified the Birmingham mills, from which they have been purchasing their pig iron in the past, that they would not renew their contract, for the reason that they could have laid down at their mills on the Pacific coast pig iron made in China more cheaply than the Alabama mills could deliver it on the Pacific coast. Now, let us see. We are now importing pig iron from China, and it has been sold in New York City and Hawaii, Humboldt, Cal., Los Angeles, Cal., Portland, Oreg., Puget Sound, and San Francisco with the duty $2.50 a ton.

They are now shipping cheap Chinese pig iron made 750 miles in the interior, on the Yangtse River, boating it down to the coast, loading it upon merchant vessels and shipping it across the Pacific Ocean, paying the transportation cost and $2.50 a ton duty, and underselling the American mills that have no duty to pay. This bill reduces the present duty, which is entirely too low to keep out either cheap European pig iron or Chinese pig iron. This bill cuts that duty in two. The result will be that Chinese makers of pig iron will in the future, if this ruinous, unjustifiable, un-American bill becomes a law, drive the American mills out of the market on the Pacific coast. market will be monopolized by the cheap Chinese-iron producers, Mr. PAYNE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the presentation of this bill at this time and in this way gives me no small degree of embarrass-Whether right or wrong, I have been one of the Members on this side of the Chamber who believe in lower duties on many of the schedules in the tariff law. I have consistently endeavored to maintain that position whenever a matter of this kind has presented itself for discussion or a vote. When the Payne bill was under consideration I was for the first time a Member of this body. I recognized then that I knew very little about the tariff law. I appreciate now, much stronger than before, how imporlaw. I appreciate now, much stronger than before, how important information on tariff matters is to the Members of this body. I appreciate as never before how imperfect and improper action is likely to be, unless guided by the fullest possible knowledge.

The only distinct contribution made to our tariff policy in recent years is not that duties should be a little higher or a little lower, but that the duties, whatever they are, should be based upon facts and that the law should be both scientific and The ascertainment of the facts is and must be the work of experts. There followed the need of a tariff commission, and the work of a tariff commission must be antecedent to tariff legislation. Mr. Chairman, the people of this country believe in a tariff commission, they expect this body to make use of the tariff commission, and every consideration of common sense requires that we make use of the tariff commission we now have,

The only reason that some of us voted against the Payne bill was that the duties it imposed upon wool and cotton goods were too high. The basis of the criticism that bill has experienced before the country is that its schedules of wool and cotton were not lower. The one schedule of that bill reduced from the previous law in the most marked degree was the iron and steel schedule. Duties therein were cut about 50 per cent, and no one complained they had not been cut enough.

For a period of two years 90,000,000 of people have been asking for a revision of the wool and cotton schedules. The Tariff Board has long been busy, expending large sums of money, in securing full and accurate information on these important items. For the first time in the history of all tariff legislation in this country a legislative body now has at its command the basic facts upon which to frame a logical, sensible, just tariff law. The Tariff Board report on the cotton schedule will soon be available; that on the wool schedule has long been before this House. Ever since early in December there have been before this body complete, accurate, illuminating facts covering every part of the wool schedule, accompanied by a recommendation from those who compiled them, the Tariff Board, that the duties of that schedule should be greatly reduced-have been before this body literally crying for attention, and yet the majority have turned their backs upon them, upon the wishes of the people, upon the necessities of the people, and brought in here for consideration and to be passed a bill revising the iron and steel schedule. They well know the Tariff Board is expected to ascertain the facts relating to this schedule later in the year, and report them to the House, but they must be afraid of those facts, they must want to put through legislation the facts do not warrant, else why this procedure?

Then another consideration, Mr. Chairman. Not long ago the storm of the country broke upon this body because important measures were not given full consideration on the floor, because the individuality was largely lost in the procedure of the House, and voting occurred under a machine-like process. attributes of tyranny, heretofore known or condemned, are employed by the majority on this bill, and several new ones have been resorted to. Here is a bill vitally affecting nearly 30,000 different industrial institutions and directly affecting 1,500,000 wage earners in this country, and yet it is brought here in the morning, we are given just five hours to debate and investigate it, and then must start to vote on its provisions. know what is in the bill, we can not know what is in the bill, and when we vote we vote absolutely in the dark. This bill directly affects 25,000 wage earners—miners—in my district, but I do not know whether it will bless them or ruin them, and you do not propose to give me a chance to find out. I can not help but ask, What is the matter with this bill that the Democratic majority wrote it in secret and now pass it in the dark? We expected better things from you than this. Truly, we have been grievously disappointed. Can it be you expect men who have some regard for the duty they owe their constituents and their country to vote for a measure thus proposed and thus shoved through?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MILLER. For a question.

Mr. RAKER. The Tariff Board report was not available to Members until about the 7th of January. Is not that correct?
Mr. MILLER. I do not understand it so; I received a copy in December.

Mr. RAKER. The printed report?

Mr. MILLER. I think so.

Mr. RAKER. I sent to the Printing Office and was not able to get a copy.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman from Minnesota is talking about the synopsis of the report.

Mr. MILLER. Well, it does not really matter. Mr. RAKER. I want to say, so as to get it square on the record, that I was informed by the Public Printer about the 4th or 5th of January that it was not permissible to give out advanced sheets, and that it was not in a shape then to be delivered.

Mr. MILLER. It may be that the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is a correct one, and that the report which I first saw was the synopsis, but it was ample, full, and a good indication of what was to follow.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Did the tariff report refer to anything but wool?

That is all we cared to have it refer to at Mr. MILLER. that time-wool and woolen manufactures.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota says he wants to be fully advised on the subject that he is going to investigate?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman had time since he received the Tariff Board's report to read it?

Mr. MILLER. I will say that I have read large parts of it; that I have had vastly more opportunity to read it than I have had to read this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I had better proceed, in order to complete what I have to say. The bill which is presented, on its face states that it is a tariff for revenue only in respect to this schedule. The gentlemen who are sponsors for the bill on the floor of the House state emphatically, if not exultantly, that it is strictly on a revenue basis. Mr. Chairman, for one, I never have believed, and I do not now believe, in a tariff on a revenue basis. I always have believed, and I believe now, in the principle of protection, and I think the degree of protection should be the difference in cost of production at home and abroad; this that the wages of the American workman may not be reduced, and that his standard of living may be maintained.

While I have for some time strongly insisted, and voted accordingly, that many of the duties now in force should be reduced, because they are unreasonably high, because they are above a point actually needed for just protection, yet I have as strongly insisted upon the maintenance of protection. It should be the basis of all our tariff legislation. It matters not that doctrinaires and Democrats declaim against it; no civilized nation on earth has ever existed entirely without it. A country with a low wage scale naturally might ask for free trade, if she wanted to keep her wage scale down; but a country with a high wage scale can not live without protection, if she intends to maintain that wage scale.

While they tell us, Mr. Chairman, that this is a revenue bill, yet they also tell us it is a failure as a revenue producer. Strange, indeed, it should be named a bill for revenue, when the revenue it will produce is less than that derived under the present law. Possibly they have unwittingly admitted that a bill drawn on a revenue basis is a failure in every respect.

Then, too, Mr. Chairman, this bill changes the law from specific to ad valorem duties. As yet no one on that side of the Chamber has seen fit to give any reason for making this change. They can well be silent. It is a system condemned by more than a hundred years of tariff labor in this country. Every authority on tariff matters condemns it; every collector of customs condemns it; experience everywhere condemns it. Such a system promotes fraud and the escaping of tariff charges, for undervaluation is always, everywhere, the simplest thing in the world.

There are some particular items, Mr. Chairman, to which I desire to call attention. By this bill iron ore is placed on the free list. Never since we became an industrial Nation has there been an hour when there was not some protection on iron Under the law that existed from 1897 to 1909 the duty was 40 cents per ton, a very considerable protection. In 1909 the Payne bill was passed, reducing this duty 65 per cent, or to the small sum of 15 cents per ton. Cut to the quick, reduced to the last notch, just a shadow of protection remained. This bill puts it on the free list; inaugurates free trade in iron ore. The object in so doing has been frankly stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who drew the bill. He says it is to give relief to the manufacturers of steel in Pennsylvania, who have been hit by the other provisions of this bill. A remarkable situation. We are told this bill was aimed at the manufacturers of iron and steel, to take from them the unholy profits they are making. That having been done by the other provisions, it is now proposed to compensate them by giving them free iron ore. And at whose expense? At the expense of the mining regions in the West—in Minnesota, in Wisconsin, in Michigan.

The gentleman stated that steel was king and his palace was Pennsylvania. I reply that this palace of the king would be but a whitened sepulcher for dead men's bones were it not for the iron mines of Minnesota. It is proposed to rob Peter to pay Paul. Nay, to rob Peter to pay Satan. The wealth of three great States is to be drawn and their people robbed to bring relief to the steel manufacturers who are hit by this bill.

There are three possible sources of iron-ore importations into this country-Canada, Sweden and Finland, and Cuba. There is no prospect that iron ore in anything but negligible quantities will ever be imported from Canada. The large deposits are all this side of the line. From Sweden and Finland some iron ore is now being brought to this country, a condition made possible by the reduction in the duty made by the Payne bill. Under free trade more importations will occur, but not to affect seriously the iron-ore market in America for at least many years to come. The situation in Cuba is different. A large area of excellent ore, easily mined, has recently been made available. This is at present, as far as is now developed, in the control of Mr. Schwab and his associates. They can and will import Cuban ores at a large profit to themselves, as they will have this advantage over their competitors. This importation would probably not affect, immediately, the ore market in America. This bill can then be rightly termed a bill for the relief of the Pennsylvania Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the Maryland Steel Co.

But the danger to American ores lies in the future. Other ore bodies in Cuba can and will be developed, importations on a large scale occur, and the price of iron ore in the United States be materially affected. Mine workmen in Cuba get about 60 cents a day, and the supply is inexhaustible. In the United States these workmen get from two to three dollars a day. Surely free iron ore will strike a direct blow at American labor. It is not unlikely, yes, I am willing to predict, that if this bill becomes a law the mine operators of the West, in order to meet this cheap labor, free ore from Cuba, will be compelled to reduce wages all along the line. The man who goes down into the bowels of the earth to labor for himself and family bears burdens heavier than those borne by any other toiler on earth. His work is harder, his surroundings more unpleasant, the danger to life and limb infinitely more imminent. Surely the mantle of protection, if spread anywhere, should be extended to shield his wages in at least some degree. This bill proposes to take away some of the profits from the steel manufacturers and then to pay him back out of the wages of the toilers in the mines.

We are also told, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is designed to lower the price of iron and steel products along the Atlantic coast, while that price will remain untouched between the Alleghenies and the Rockies. It is expected that material importations from foreign parts will be made to Atlantic cities, but by reason of railroad freight charges such importations will not reach beyond the Allegheny Mountains.

And I think this statement is true. The many millions who occupy the great center of the continent have no immediate interest in the bill. It will not reduce to them the price of a steel rail or a needle, the price of a steel girder or a hairpin. It is essentially sectional, and by the arrangement of its parts is made peculiarly so. We all know that freight rates on heavy commodities like iron and steel are determining factors in the price of those commodities, and certain areas can not be affected by general tariff laws. But all the country, all its sections, all its people are to-day vitally interested in the sums they pay for clothing and the sums they pay for food; are insistently asking for legislation on wool and cotton articles, that all the people and all the country may be benefited. In refusing to legislate respecting the pressing needs of all the people rather than passing sectional measures; in refusing to revise the tariff with the aid of the Tariff Board in the face of opportunity and the wishes of the American people; in refusing to legislate by a deliberative process rather than in the dark by a steam roller, the Democratic majority of this House can rightly be charged with having completely abandoned every principle they have talked for during the past four years. It is fortunate, having in view an approaching election, that thus early they have shown what can be expected of them.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. UTTER].

Mr. UTTER. Mr. Chairman, it is a long time since I have heard a more adroit presentation of a case than that which was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] when he appeared as the champion of the Democracy. He said some things, however, during his presentation to which, if we did not call particular attention, it seems to me we should be unfair to ourselves and unfair to him also, certainly unfair to his party.

All during his argument he used but two illustrations. One was the illustration which centered around Andrew Carnegie and the other was the illustration which centered around Charles M. Schwab. Any man who knows the history of those men-and who does not, if he knows the history of the United States for the last few years-knows that if either one of them were dropped on a desert island, by evening they would own the island and have it organized. You can not frame a tariff bill with Charles M. Schwab and Andrew Carnegie as your typical men. A tariff bill must be framed for the average man, and Charles M. Schwab and Andrew Carnegie are not average men. Therefore I want to call particular attention to the fact that while we have been discussing this bill, perhaps not intentionally, we have had in view how it may affect Charles M. Schwab and Andrew Carnegie, and we have apparently forgotten the other 20,000 people who are employers of labor, and the million and a half of laborers and the three billions of capital that are interested outside of those two men. It seems to me we ought to remember that the people outside of those two men are as much interested as are the two men themselves.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania said another thing, and we on the Republican side applauded. He said he was proud of what had been accomplished in this industry, and, we believe, through the protective system. I am proud, too, and every American citizen must be proud, that under a system that has built this country up to its present position, we have been able to develop not only Charles M. Schwab and Andrew Carnegie, but the men who work with their hands and who receive better pay and more comforts and more of the luxuries of life than they would anywhere else on the face of God's green footstool. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is something to be proud of. Now what is the proposition? It is proposed to bring in a bill that the Democrats themselves admit will push back this line that limits the competition and that saves the market to the American workman. They have admitted that the purpose of this bill is to push that line back, back, back, and the further you go the more satisfied they are. As an American citizen, as a believer in the principle of protection, my idea is to hold the American market for the American workingman, and to hold it faithfully. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Another statement made by the gentleman in the first part of his speech did not agree wholly with the last part of his speech. In almost the second sentence of his remarks he began by saying that he had no special information upon the subject, and yet later, when the question was put to him by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], if the committee had had any hearings, he said, No, they had not. Pity the remark! Pity the confession of a man who stands in the American Congress, ready to legislate for all the people of America, and who admits at the beginning of his speech that he has no special information upon the particular subject about which he desires to legislate, and who would not ask it from anybody else! It seems to me we ought to remember as Americans that the American people stand not waiting so much for legislation as they do for information. It is not because they have had legislation thrown at them on the tariff question that they are finding fault. It is because, as they say, so much misinformation has been thrown at them. The Republican Party in the last Congress and in this Congress stands ready and back of our President in support of a board that is to obtain information, and find it in a way that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] admitted himself he did not have time to do. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, for the sake of the country, for the sake of Democracy, for the sake of the Republican Party, the thing to do with this bill is to stop it before it goes any further. It has been sired in darkness and brought forth in ignorance. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into an extended discussion of this bill. I have expressed my views in reference to the general tariff question a number of times to the House during this session of Congress. It is not necessary for me to again state to the House what my position upon the tariff is. I only rise now to answer a few criticisms that have been made on this bill, and I am really surprised that there are so few criticisms that have been made to a bill of such importance as the revision of the metal schedule. gentlemen on that side of the House complain that they have not had ample time for debate. I want to say that we expect to pass a number of tariff schedules. Most of the appropriation bills must yet be passed, and it was therefore necessary for us to limit this debate in order that we may transact the business of this House and not be driven into another summer

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman— Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not care to yield. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, as to the criticism that we have only allowed one day's debate on this bill, I would like to call the attention of gentlemen on that side of the House to the fact that when the Payne bill came before this House for consideration there were only about 12 days devoted to general There are 14 schedules in the Payne bill besides the administrative features of the bill. If one day's debate on each schedule had been devoted to each schedule of that bill and one day to the administrative features of the bill, it would have taken 15 days. Therefore we have given more time to general debate on this schedule than you averaged for debate when you brought the Payne bill before this House. And more than that, it does not lie in the mouth of gentlemen on that side of the House who claim to be progressive Republicans to criticize this side of the House for the way in which it presents its bills to the country. When the Payne bill was presented to this House and to the country there was not a Member of the House who was allowed to offer a single amendment to the iron and steel schedule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You brought in a rule providing for five, six, or seven amendments to the bill, not one of them applying to this schedule, and then you criticize us when to-morrow we will take up this bill and take it up under the five-minute rule and allow every man in this House an opportunity to offer amendments, paragraph by paragraph. Now, you may say that you can not change the bill. Why can not you change it? Because a majority of this House is in favor of the bill; but if a majority of this House is not in favor of the bill, your amendments can be adopted and you have no right to change a bill if a majority of this House does not agree with you. I was rather surprised at the criticism of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania when he called to the attention of this House that we had abandoned the free-list bill that we sent to the President last year and that he vetoed, that we had not included in this bill a paragraph putting agricultural implements on the free list. there is no man in this House who knows better than the gentleman from Pennsylvania that agricultural implements are not included in this schedule. They have never been included in this schedule; they are in the sundry schedule, and it would have been just as apt and just as proper for us to have put free bread and free meat in the iron and steel schedule as it would be to put free agricultural implements. We have put in this bill every item on the free-list bill that relates to the metal schedule, and more besides. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, as to the criticism of my friend from Tennessee that we are opening the gates of the Pacific to Chinese pig iron. I have heard that all my life. I have lived in an iron and steel district, and I have never in all my life stood for protection. I do not believe to-day that I as a manufacturer of pig iron and you as a producer of steel rails have any more right to have the Government protect your profits than the banker or the broker or the baker has a right for the Government to protect his profits. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If you are going to protect profits why do you not protect the wages of labor as well as protect the profits of the manufac-I believe that the only function of levying taxes at the customhouse is to levy them for the necessary revenue furnished by the Government, and I believe that in this bill that I hold in my hand the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means have cut out the protection of profits and presented to this House a purely revenue measure. I do not believe that it will work an injury to the iron and steel business. I am free to say that you could not destroy the entire iron and steel business of this country if you put every item in it on the free list. Now, I am not a free trader; I did not bring in a free-trade bill; I brought in a revenue bill. This great industry is able to sustain itself, and, more than that, it has a protection in a large part of this country, not due to legislative enactments, but due to the law of gravity, the cost of hauling freight.

You may divide this great country of ours into three geographical sections, namely, the Pacific slope; that portion of the country lying between the Rocky Mountains and the Alleghanies; and the portion lying between the Alleghanies and the Atlantic Ocean, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Payne] knows, even if my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] does not know, that you can not write a tariff bill on the heavy products of iron and steel that would prohibit importation on the Pacific slope that would not be an absolutely prohibitive schedule at the Atlantic ports and not produce any revenue at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only two or three minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. As you referred to me, I think you ought to vield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.
Mr. AUSTIN. When the Panama Canal is completed you can put the Alabama pig iron and Tennessee pig iron on the Pacific coast if you will put up the tariff high enough to keep out the cheap Chinese pig iron.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend, there is not any cheaper Chinese pig iron, so far as I know, than there is in Birmingham. I am not writing this tariff bill from the Birmingham standpoint, because it would not be fair to the country if I did, but if you can find me any cheaper Chinese pig iron than you can find of Birmingham pig iron I would like to see it. There are only 40,000 tons coming in on the Pacific coast to-day, and we produce 22,000,000 tons of pig iron. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] throws up his hands in horror that 40,000 tons are coming in against the production of the United States of 22,000,000 tons. As much came in under the $4 rate under the Dingley law, and more came in last year under the $2.50 rate under the Payne bill, and it will come in under this bill. It costs $10.50 a ton of freight to carry pig iron from Birmingham to San Francisco, and there is only a $5 freight rate from Manchester or Liverpool by water on pig iron to San Francisco. So, leaving all other questions aside, if you want to equalize the freight rates from Birmingham—and it is greater from Tennessee and greater from Pittsburgh than from Birmingham—you would have to put a $6 or $7 duty on pig iron. And you reduced it from $4 to $2.50.

As to the Mississippi Valley, that same question of freight rate prevents the foreigners from entering the Mississippi Valley at all. If you put the heavy iron and steel commodities on the free list there would not be importations into the Mississippi Valley, because they could not pay the freight and compete. There is one competitive territory in this country for iron and steel, and that is between the Allegheny Mountains and the Atlantic Ocean, and we have fixed a rate here where it would be sufficiently competitive to raise some revenue for the Government, practically as much as you raise with the higher rate, without protecting the manufacturer's profit.

You can not destroy the iron industry of this country. There is no foreigner from China or England or Germany who can enter the Mississippi Valley. Whenever he leaves the Atlantic contents of the contents o seaboard and starts anywhere freight rates are making him pay more to invade our country than the tariff rate that you yourself write in an iron and steel schedule. It is simply absurd. There is no reason why the American people should be taxed one dollar more on this schedule than is necessary to raise the revenue that must be raised for the use of the Government of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks the report of the majority that I submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks the document indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(House Report No. 260, Sixty-second Congress, second session.) TO REDUCE DUTIES ON METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF METALS.

Mr. Underwood, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 18642.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equallize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

and recommend that the bill do pass.

ABUNDANT INFORMATION AVAILABLE.

In reporting H. R. 18642 the committee regards it as unnecessary to make more than a very general review of present conditions, as the industries involved in Schedule C have been studied and analyzed with great care within the past two years by several departments of the Government at great expense. This is especially true of the iron and steel manufacture. About two years ago the United States Immigration Commission prepared an elaborate study relating to social and economic conditions in the iron and steel and allied industries. An equally extensive study of coal and its products in relation to labor was likewise prepared by that commission. The Bureau of Labor, in its report on the strike at the Bethlehem Steel Works (S. Doc. 521, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), has furnished valuable data concerning hours and conditions of labor, wages, and allied matters prevailing in one of the important plants of the country. The results of the 1910 inquiries by the Bureau of the Census and late reports of the Geological Survey are all available.

STEENGTH OF IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

STRENGTH OF IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

A survey of the Iron and steel industry shows convincingly that it has reached a position of such strength and independence that the industry does not need the helping hand of the Government in order to stand in competition with foreign countries. This desirable state of affairs has been reached as a result of progressive improvements in industrial methods coincident with steady reductions of the tariff, which have impressed upon steel producers the necessity of shaping their methods in accordance with the recent inventions and processes and with the principles of effective business organization. Under these conditions the committee feels warranted in recommending that the duties on metals and manufactures thereof be placed upon a distinctly revenue basis, while definitely adhering to the object of securing for the Treasury as large an income as can be obtained from this schedule consistent with conserving the general interests of the consumer.

ABILITY TO COMPETE.

ABILITY TO COMPETE.

That the iron and steel industry is fully able to accept a schedule of duties based upon the revenue principle can be seen from a brief consideration of the following facts:

American iron and steel makers have access to what is probably the best supply of raw material in the world, a condition fully admitted by leading manufacturers. Mr. E. H. Gary, chairman board of directors of United States Steel Corporation, when recently before the House Committee on the Investigation of the United States Steel Corporation (Hearings, p. 106), was asked by Mr. Young, "I understood you to say that you thought the Messal was the finest iron-ore district in the world."

To this Mr. Gary replied, "I did." This view is amply confirmed by the report of the Bureau of Corporations, which has devoted elaborate study to the ore resources of the country, and particularly those owned by the United States Steel Corporation. Furthermore, the Bureau of Corporations clearly shows that the iron-ore resources of the country have been acquired at prices which represent an exceedingly moderate investment on the part of the concerns which now own and operate them. They are therefore able to compete on most favorable terms with foreigners, in so far at least as concerns raw material and coal. Both in the natural abundance of ore and coal, and in the geographical location of these production factors with reference to one another, as well as cheapness in mining, it is doubtful whether any other country can compare with the United States. Certainly no other is in position to manufacture so large a tonnage under such favorable conditions of access to raw materials and abundance of supply.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie is on record as saying:

"After the Civil War Congress seent for the manufacturers and explained that it was ready to 'protect' steel, and 30 per cent duty was imposed. Steel rails, all imported, then cost $90 per ton; the duty $82. To-day the price is $28 per ton, home production, and the duty $4. No foreign supply is nee in the infant industry has grown to be a giant, protection has done its work." (Century Magazine, May, 1911.)

Low Wages in Industries are handicapped by the necessity of paying abnormally high wages, and that high-tariff drages enable producing plants to pay these high wages. The recent investigation of the country work their employees excessively long hours, but the general rates of wages paid are extremely low.

In speaking of these conditions in its report on the steel industry, the Bureau of Labor says:

"The investigation developed that the seven-day working week was not confined to the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation and in which department nine-tenths of the employees worked seven days a week, but it was also found that to a considerable extent in other departments, where no such metallurgical necessity can be claimed, productive work was carried on on Sundays just as on other days of the week. For example, in some establishments the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills were found operating seven days a week for commercial reasons only.

"The hardship of a 12-hour day and a 7-day week is still further accentuated by the fact that every week or two weeks, as the case may be, when the employees on the day shift are transferred to the night shift, and vice versa, employees remain on duty without relief either its to work one shift of employees on the day of change through the centre 24 hours, the succeeding shift working the regular 12 hours when it comes on duty. In some instances the change is effected by having one shift remain on duty 18 hours and the succeeding shift work is hours, one shift of employees on the day of change through the centre 24 hours, the succeeding shift working the regular 12 hours when it comes on duty. In some instances the change is effected by having one shift remain on duty 18 hours and the succeeding shift work is hours.

"That much of the Sunday labor in the steel sider that the general tendency in other industries for years past has been toward a shorter working day. Years ago the 10-hour day became almost a standard; since that time further reductions have brought the working day to nine, and in many cases to eight, hours, and this reduction has been accompanied by a part holiday on Saturday. * * * Another striking characteristic of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry is the large proportion of anskilled workmen in the labor force. These unskilled workmen are very largely recruited from the ranks of recent immigrants. * * * * "Taking the employees in all occupations in the industry, nearly 60 per cent are foreign born, and nearly two-thirds of the foreign born are of the Slavic races. Large as is the proportion that unskilled labor forms of the total labor force in the iron and steel industry, steel experts have noted the fact that the tendency of recent years has been steadily toward the reduction in the number of highly skilled men employed and the establishment of the general wage on the basis of common or unskilled labor. Nor is this tendency likely to diminish, since each year sees a wider use of automatic appliances which unskilled labor can easily be trained to handle."

With reference to rates of wages, the recent inquiries are equally conclusive. In the following table, taken from Senate Document No. 521, Sixty-first Congress, first session, is given the number and per centage of employees receiving each specified rate of wage per hour at the Bethlehem Steel Works. This affords a typical example of the situation. It will be noted that the largest number of employees are those who are grouped from 12 to 18 cents per hour or from $1.20 to $1.80 for a 10-hour day.

How this compares with the general rate of wages prevailing in the industry can be seen from Table 2, in which is reviewed the rate paid throughout the industry as a whole. This table has been prepared by the Bureau of Labor for its forthcoming report on iron and steel.

More than one-half, or 56.48 per cent, of the 172,706 employees included in the steel report of the Bureau of Labor earned 16 and under 25 cents per hour; almost one-fifth, 19.92 per cent, earned less than 16 cents per hour; almost exactly one-half, 49.69 per cent, earned less than 18 cents per hour; three-fourths, 76.40 per cent, earned less than 25 cents per hour; 7.45 per cent earned less than 50 cents per hour; and 2.55 per cent earned 50 cents and over per hour.

The table which follows shows by means of cumulative percentages the classified earnings for each of the principal branches of the industry.

It is an unavoidable conclusion from these figures that the steel industry at the present time is not paying its employees excessively high rates of wages per man or per hour, and that with the large immigration, constituting free trade in labor, which now exists, the employees of the industry are not affected beneficially by the tariff on iron and steel. Their cost of living is made high by the other schedules of the tariff, and they receive no compensating benefit in wages to offset this increased cost.

Approximated; this amount never computed by the corporation.

In these years the intercompany profits in inventories were not deducted by the corporation, and hence need not be restored.

After deducting employees' bonus fund, which in this year was taken out after stating net earnings, but which in other years is deducted before determining the net earnings.

This statement s'ould be examined in comparison with the following table compiled by the bureau and showing the Steel Corporation's earnings:

ABILITY OF INDEPENDENTS TO COMPETE.

ABILITY OF INDEPENDENTS TO COMPETE.

It is thus established that an average annual earning of 12 per cent has been made by the United States Steel Corporation during a period of 10 years, in which its total investment in tangible property has increased from $698,000,000 to $1,186,000,000. This probably may be taken as a fair representation of the general condition of the industry as shown by the fact that the percentage of total output of iron and steel products manufactured by the United States Steel Corporation has been decreasing while that of other plants presumably in competition with it has been increasing. The Bureau of Corporations furnishes the following summary table, showing the percentage of all steel products turned out in the United States by the United States Steel Corporation as compared with the percentage of products turned out by other concerns.

³ For 1909; figures for 1910 not available.

This clearly shows that the general output of the corporation in nearly every line of steel manufacture has been declining as compared with the total output of the country. The independent companies, in short, must have been able to gain upon the United States Steel Corporation in their sales to consumers, a fact which would indicate that they were able to do more than hold their own. On the other hand, it has always been recognized that many of the plants which were taken into the United States Steel Corporation at the time of its organization were not the most efficient establishments in the industry; that in spite of this fact the corporation has been able to make an average earning of 12 per cent while enormously increasing its actual tangible investment is conclusive in showing that there is no reason for regarding it as more than ordinarily representative of general conditions throughout the industry.

STEEL EXPORTS.

At present American manufacturers of iron and steel are fully able to compete in the export trade. Mr. E. H. Gary, when recently testifying before the committee on the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, informed the committee (Hearings, p. 95) that—

"So far as we are concerned in this country, we get pretty nearly the same price from those countries all the time"—

Countries to which iron and steel products are regularly exported, particularly South America—

"I think, so far as foreign manufacturers are concerned, they get higher prices from the South American countries and the other countries that you speak of, at times at least, than they do in their own country.

"Elsewhere Mr. Gary said that the average price of our exports rails was 27 cents a ton higher than the domestic price."

Elsewhere Mr. Gary said that the average price abroad for export rails "would be a little less" than at home. He thought they were netting the corporation about $25.50 per ton. Very similar conditions are understood to exist with reference to products other than rails. If it be true that the American iron and steel industry can successfully compete in the foreign market at prices nearly, and sometimes quite, as good as those which obtain at home, there would appear to be no reason for the maintenance of protective duties on those items which are in this favorable condition.

That we are able to compete successfully in foreign markets is amply proved by the figures for export trade in iron and steel products afforded by the most recent official reports of our trade abroad. Detailed data covering our foreign commerce in metals and manufactures thereof are presented in this report as Appendix B. As will be seen by reference to that appendix, exportation of iron and steel products during the fiscal year 1911 amounted to $230,725,000.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

Reference is frequently made to the question of comparative cost of production of iron and steel and their products in the United States and in foreign countries. The method of argument is misleading, because of the fact that money outlays for the production of given articles have no necessary connection with or bearing upon the relative competitive power of various countries. It may easily be that a high money cost of production in a given country is coincident with a large power of competition. High wages per hour may be associated with a more than correspondingly high degree of efficiency, and even where this is not the case it is frequently true that large money costs are offset by charges for transportation, while in not a few instances high costs have absolutely nothing to do with international competition, since they represent the necessary costs of producing portions of the supply which are absolutely indispensable and which can not be obtained from a less expensive source. It remains true that even with these reservations money costs of production for iron and steel in the United States are probably as low as they are anywhere in the world.

In its recent extensive study of domestic steel costs the Bureau of Corporations has not been able to assemble corresponding data for foreign countries. In this connection the Commissioner of Corporations says:

"The bureau made a comprehensive investigation into the costs of

In its recent extensive study of domestic steel costs the Bureau of Corporations has not been able to assemble corresponding data for foreign countries. In this connection the Commissioner of Corporations $\text{Says}$:

"The bureau made a comprehensive investigation into the costs of the raw materials and finished products of the iron and steel industry in the United States, the principal results of which are presented in this report. It also attempted to get similar costs of manufacture in the chief foreign producing countries, but while much information of a general character was obtained relating to the subject it was found impossible to obtain any comprehensive information as to the costs as shown directly on the books of account."

Under these conditions it is not necessary to examine the cost figures presented in the report of, the bureau for their bearing on the rates of duty in Schedule C. The figures of the bureau show low costs and large margins of profit, both for the United States Steel Corporation and for independent companies, a condition which amply sustains the digest of findings already cited in this report.

Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material well situated with reference to one another. It has the use of abundant capital and the best of business organization, as shown by the large profits earned and the large reinvestments made in the industry. It is able to export in competition with foreign countries, as is freely admitted by its chief officials and as is shown by the figures of the Government. Were the domestic demand not so extensive as it has been, exports might be increased, and the testimony of the officers of the United States Steel Corporation shows that prices abroad are about as satisfactory as they are at home. The industry has the advantage of low costs when estimated even from a rigid accounting standpoint. For all these reasons, it may be regarded a

CHANGES MADE BY ACT OF 1909.

CHANGES MADE BY ACT OF 1908.

The act of 1909 reduced the duty on iron ore in paragraph 117 from 40 to 15 cents per ton. Basic slag was transferred to the free list. Pig iron, paragraph 118, was reduced by the act of 1909 from $4 to $2.50 per ton. Wrought and cast scrap iron was made $1 per ton instead of $4, while ferrosilicon was transferred to paragraph 184 at $5 per ton for a silicon content up to 15 per cent, and 20 per cent for that of a content containing more than 15 per cent of silicon. The definition of scrap iron or scrap steel was amended by providing that scrap should include iron or steel which could be remanufactured only by melting.

Bar iron, muck bars, rolled iron, etc. were reduced by the steel was a scrap steel by the steel was a scrap steel by melting.

scrap should include from or steel which could be remanufactured only by melting.

Bar iron, muck bars, rolled iron, etc., were reduced by the act of 1909, paragraph 119, from six-tenths of a cent per pound, the rate in 1897, to three-tenths of a cent per pound.

The tariff of 1909 reduced the rate on round iron in paragraph 120 from eight-tenths to six-tenths of a cent per pound. Slabs and blooms were cut from five-tenths of a cent to four-tenths of a cent per pound, except in the case of iron bars, blooms, etc., in which charcoal is used as fuel, which were reduced from $12 to $8 per ton. This reduction on the paragraph as a whole was equivalent to about one-third of the former rate on a basis of ad valorem equivalents.

Important action was taken regarding structural iron and steel shown in paragraph 121. The rate on these items had been five-tenths of a cent per pound in 1897. Under that rate iron had been admitted "whether plain or punched or fitted for use." The tariff of 1909 made the rate three-tenths and four-tenths of a cent per pound, according to value. It, however, in describing the items subject to this rate, used the words "not assembled or manufactured," etc. In the event that structural iron and steel was thus assembled it would be dutiable at 45 per cent. The effect of this change was to transfer a considerable number of articles largely imported to a higher rate than was paid under the tariff of 1897.

Boller or other plate, provided for in paragraph 122, was dutiable at five-tenths of a cent per pound and upward according to valuation under the act of 1897, but was made dutiable at three-tenths of a cent per pound and upward according to valuation under the act of 1897 but was made dutiable at three-tenths of a cent per pound and upward according to valuation under the act of 1897, but was made dutiable at three-tenths of a cent per pound and upward according to value, for sthe four included in the act of 1897. The general effect was a slight decrease from the former rates.

Iron or steel anchors dutiable under paragraph 124 of the act of 1909 were given a duty by that act of 1 cent per pound in place of 1½ cents in 1897. The act of 1897 made forgings dutiable at 35 per cent, the duty being reduced to 30 per cent by the act of 1909 on all forgings not machined, etc. Ball bearings, etc., were made dutiable at 45 per cent, the same as in 1897, with a slightly changed classification. Hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel was reduced by paragraph 124 of the act of 1909 from five-tenths to eight-tenths of a cent per pound according to gauge to one of three-tenths of a cent per pound and upward.

according to gauge to one of three-tenths of a cent per pound and upward.

Hoop or band iron for baling cotton or any other commodity was made dutiable in paragraph 125 under the same description as in 1897, but at three-tenths of a cent per pound instead of five-tenths of a cent. In the same way paragraph 126 of the act of 1909 reduced the rate on steel rails from seven-twentieths of a cent per pound ($7.84 per ton) to seven-fortieths of a cent per pound ($3.29 per ton), while railway plates and bars were reduced from four-tenths to three-tenths of a cent per pound. The cut in steel rails was about 40 per cent of the ad valorem equivalent.

Common or black sheets of iron or steel were dealt with in paragraph 127 of the act of 1909, being there classified upon a slightly altered basis at a duty of from five-tenths to nine-tenths of a cent per pound in place of from seven-tenths to 1½ tents per pound in 1897.

Paragraph 128 of the act of 1909 taxed iron or steel sheets or plates except tin plates at two-tenths of a cent per pound in excess of the regular rate on untreated sheets when galvanized or coated, this being the same rate as in 1897. A new provision covering sheets coated with layers of other metal by forging with a duty of 40 per cent was added.

the same rate as in 1897. A new provision covering sheets coated with layers of other metal by forging with a duty of 40 per cent was added.

Sheets of iron or steel, polished, were covered in paragraph 129 at a rate of 1½ cents per pound in place of 2 cents per pound in 1897.

Tin plates, temeplates, and taggers tin were provided for in paragraph 130 at a rate of 1½ cents per pound, against 1½ cents in 1897.

Ingots, blooms, slabs, etc., were made dutiable in paragraph 131 of the act of 1909 with a very slightly changed classification at seven-fortieths of a cent per pound up to 7 cents per pound and 20 per cent, according to value, instead of three-tenths of a cent per pound upward to 4½ cents per pound under the act of 1897.

In paragraph 132 of the act of 1909 steel wool was made dutiable at 40 per cent, instead of being dutiable as an "article manufactured from steel wire" at 1½ cents per pound in addition to the rate of duty imposed upon the wire used in the manufacture of the article.

In paragraph 133 iron grit, shot, and sand were separately enumerated at 1 cent a pound, as against 45 per cent under the act of 1897. this being an increase of about 66 per cent.

Wire rods, untempered or untreated, were made dutiable under paragraph 134 on about the same basis as in 1897, but at three-tenths and six-tenths of a cent per pound in place of four-tenths and three-fourths of a cent in 1897.

Iron and steel wire were reclassified in paragraph 135 at duties of from 1 to 1½ cents per pound, but not less than 35 per cent ad valorem. The act of 1897 had established three subclassifications, ranging from 1½ to 2 cents per pound, all valued at more than 4 cents being dutiable at 40 per cent. In the same paragraph, telegraph, telephone, and other similar wires were given a rate of 40 per cent, and wire heddles were taxed 25 cents per thousand plus 40 per cent.

The rate on bars or rods cold rolled, in paragraph 137, was reduced from one-fourth of a cent per pound, in addition to the rete on bars or rods hot rolled, i the rate on common sheets, instead of that rate plus 1 cent per pound in 1897.

In paragraph 140 anvils were reduced from 1½ to 1½ cents per pound. Automobiles, bicycles, etc., were taxed by paragraph 141 at 45 per cent, this being a new classification not appearing in the act of 1897, the articles then being taxed at 45 per cent as unenumerated manufactures.

Axles were reduced by paragraph 142 from 1 cent to three-fourths of a cent per pound.

Blacksmiths' hammers, etc., were reduced by paragraph 143 of the act of 1909 from 1½ to 1½ cents per pound.

In paragraph 144 bolts, hinges, etc., were reduced from 1½ to 1½ cents per pound, the former being the rate in 1897.

Card clothing not actually and permanently fitted to and attached to carding machines or to parts thereof was reclassified in paragraph 145 of the act of 1909 at 29 and 45 cents per square foot the same as in 1897, while a new classification at 55 cents per square foot was added.

Cast-iron pipe was made dutiable under paragraph 146 at one-fourth of a cent instead of four-tenths of a cent per pound.

Cast-iron plates, etc., were reclassified in paragraph 147 of the act of 1909. A number of enumerated articles were given a rate of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, the same as in 1897, but a new subclassification covering chiseled and drilled castings dutiable at 1 cent a pound was added.

Malleable iron castings included in paragraph 148 of the act of 1909 were reduced from nine-tenths to seven-tenths of a cent per pound.

Cast hollow ware dutiable in 1897 at 2 cents a pound was reduced Maleable from castings included in paragraph 148 of the act of 1909 were reduced from nine-tenths to seven-tenths of a cent per pound.

Cast hollow ware dutiable in 1897 at 2 cents a pound was reduced by paragraph 149 of the act of 1909 to 1½ cents a pound.

Iron or steel chains were reduced on some sizes in paragraph 150 of the act of 1909. In 1897 they were dutiable at 1½ cents up to 3 cents, according to size, but not less than 45 per cent. In the act of 1909 they were made dutiable at from ½ to 3 cents per pound, but not less than 45 per cent. This amounted to a slight decrease in rate based on ad valorem equivalents. The old rates worked out at 47.72 for 1909, while the corresponding average in 1911 was 47.30 per cent on the strictly dutiable imports.

In paragraph 151, iron or steel tubes, pipes, etc., were reclassified. In 1897 iron or steel boiler tubes, pipes, etc., were 2 cents per pound. The act of 1909 omitted the word "boiler" before tubes and established a classification according to the diameter of the tubes. The 1909 rate ranged from 1 cent to 2 cents per pound and a new provision was added fixing a rate of 1½ cents per pound on other articles made of charcoal iron.

Cutlery, covered in paragraph 152 of the act of 1909, was enumermade of charcoal iron.

Cutlery, covered in paragraph 152 of the act of 1909, was enumerated and taxed in the same way and at the same rate as in 1897, except for a special provision relating to blades, handles, etc. Razors were subclassified more elaborately than in 1897, the lowest classification being given a rate of 35 per cent instead of 50 cents per dozen and 15 per cent. This amounted to a very large increase in rates on blades and unfinished razors, and the present rates are practically prohibitory. The equivalent ad valorem rate on razors and razor blades under the Dingley Act was 54.62 per cent on the imports of 1909, but under the act of 1909 was 71.34 per cent for 1910, and 71.30 per cent for 1911.

Swords and sword blades were increased in paragraph 153 of the 1909, but under the act of 1909 was 71.34 per cent for 1910, and 71.30 per cent for 1911.

Swords and sword blades were increased in paragraph 153 of the act of 1909 from 35 per cent, the rate fixed in 1897, to 50 per cent.

In paragraph 154 of the act of 1909 some changes were made in the enumeration of table and other knives for the purpose of extending the classification, making the rates 1 cent each and 15 per cent up to 14 cents each and 15 per cent, as against 1½ cents each and 15 per cent up to 16 cents each and 15 per cent, as against 1½ cents each and 15 per cent up to 16 cents each and 15 per cent, the rates in 1897. The minimum rate to be collected on any was made 40 per cent in 1909 instead of 45 per cent in 1897. Under the old rates of duty the ad valorem equivalent was 51.25 per cent in 1909, compared with 43.26 per cent for 1910 and 43.43 in 1911.

In paragraph 155 of the act of 1909, files, rasps, etc., were reduced from a rate of 30 cents to $1 per dozen, to one from 25 cents to 775 cents per dozen, according to length. This was equivalent to a reduction of about 14 per cent of the old rate. The old rates were equivalent to 79.35 per cent on the basis of 1909 importations, while the new rates were equivalent to 68.06 on the basis of 1910 importations.

Firearms were made dutiable under paragraphs 156 and 157 of the act of 1909, the same as in 1897, with a slight change in the classification of pistols at 75 cents each plus 25 per cent. This rate was equivalent to 62.23 per cent in 1909 and 41.81 per cent in 1910.

Hollow and enameled wares were made dutiable in paragraph 158 at 40 per cent, the same as in 1897, with a slight change in classification.

Cut nalls and spikes were reduced in paragraph 159 of the act of at 40 per cent, the same as in 1897, with a slight change in classification.

Cut nails and spikes were reduced in paragraph 159 of the act of 1909 from six-tenths to four-tenths of a cent per pound.

Horseshoe nails were reduced in paragraph 160 from 2½ to 1½ cents per pound.

Wire nails less than 1 inch in length and lighter than No. 16 wire gauge were reduced in paragraph 161 from 1 cent to three-fourths of a cent per pound, and the rate on the class not less than an inch in length and not lighter than No. 16 wire gauge from one-half to four-tenths of a cent per pound. Owing to variations in the amount brought in under the different classifications this worked out as an increase from 11.42 per cent in 1909 to 17.86 per cent on the basis of the importations of 1910.

Horseshoes, spikes, etc., were reduced from 1 cent to three-fourths from 11.42 per cent in 1909 to 17.86 per cent on the basis of the Importations of 1910.

Horseshoes, splikes, etc., were reduced from 1 cent to three-fourths of a cent per pound in paragraph 162.

Cut tacks, brads, etc., were reduced by paragraph 163 of the act of 1909 from rates of 1½ cents per thousand and 1½ cents per pound according to weight, to five-eighths cent per thousand and three-fourths cent per pound.

Needles were taxed by paragraph 164 at the same rate as in 1897, at $1 per thousand and 25 per cent ad valorem, except that latch needles were raised from $1 per thousand plus 25 per cent to $1.15 per thousand plus 35 per cent. The ad valorem equivalent of the duties shows a considerable increase as a result of this addition.

Fishing tackle, provided for in paragraph 165 of the act of 1909, was a new classification at 45 per cent.

Engraved and electrotyped plates were materially raised in paragraph 166 of the act of 1909. The act of 1897 had levied a duty of 25 per cent. This was now made 20 per cent, but plates engraved for the purpose of making figures on glass were left at 25 per cent, while lithographic plates were raised to 50 per cent.

Rivets, studs, etc., dutiable under the act of 1897 at 2 cents per pound, were taxed at 45 per cent in the act of 1909, paragraph 167, when lathed, etc., while on ordinary rivets the rate was reduced from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound.

In paragraph 168 saws were cut from 6 cents, the rate in 1897, to 5 cents, with corresponding changes on various kinds and classes of saws. The result has been a slight ad valorem decrease.

Wood screws dutiable under paragraph 169 were reduced from rates ranging in 1897 between 4 and 12 cents to rates ranging from 3 to 10 cents.

In paragraph 170 umbrella ribs, etc., were extended in classification

Wood screws dutiable under paragraph 169 were reduced from rates ranging in 1897 between 4 and 12 cents to rates ranging from 3 to 10 cents.

In paragraph 170 umbrella ribs, etc., were extended in classification and given the same rate as in 1897, at 50 per cent.

Railway wheels were reduced in paragraph 171 of the act of 1909 from 1½ to 1½ cents per pound, while ingots, blooms, etc., in the same paragraph, were reduced from 1½ to 1 cent per pound.

Aluminum, barium, etc., were taxed under the act of 1897 at varying rates and under varying classifications, which were changed in paragraph 172 of the act of 1909. In 1909 the rate on aluminum, with a slightly changed classification, was made 7 cents instead of 8 cents, the reduction working out about 10 per cent of the old rates on the crude product. Aluminum in plates, etc., had paid under the old classification an equivalent of 26.61 per cent in 1909, which was now raised under the new one to 47.02 in 1911. Barlum, etc., was taxed at 3 cents per pound plus 25 per cent. Crude magnesium, which had not been taxed, was given a duty of 3 cents per pound plus 25 per cent.

Paragraph 173 of the act of 1909 raised the rate on antimony as regulus or metal from three-fourths of a cent to 1½ cents per pound. Changes in classification were made which further raised the rate.

Bronze powder, etc., was reclassified in paragraph 175, but kept at the same rate of 12 cents per pound as in 1897.

Gold leaf in paragraph 177 of the act of 1909 was to be 35 cents per 100 leaves, but the rate was applicable only to small sizes, additional duties being paid for an increase in size.

Silver leaf in paragraph 178 was reduced from 75 cents per 500 leaves to 10 cents per 100 leaves.

Bullions and metal threads in paragraph 179 of the act of 1909 were changed in classification and rate. The old rate was 5 cents per pound plus 35 per cent.

Hooks and eyes dutiable under paragraph 180 of the act of 1909 were reduced from 5½ cents per pound, the rate in 1897.

Crude mineral substances were du

Nickel, paragraph 185 of the act of 1909, was made dutiable at 35 per cent, instead of 6 cents per pound when in sheets or strips, this being a doubling of the rate of duty.

The classification of pens in paragraph 186 left the rate as in 1897, except for pens with nib and barrel in one piece, which were made dutiable at 15 cents per gross.

Metallic pins were retained in paragraph 188 of the act of 1909 at 35 per cent, as in 1897.

Tungsten ores not enumerated in 1897 were given a rate in paragraph 190 of the act of 1909 of 10 per cent.

Watches and clocks were largely reclassified and rates changed in paragraph 192 of the act of 1909. The classification was broadened and clauses requiring the marking of places of origin, etc., were introduced. On the cheaper watch movements the rate was changed from 35 cents each plus 25 per cent to 70 cents each. On the higher grades the rate was changed from 50 cents each plus 25 per cent to $1.35 each and from 75 cents each and 25 per cent to $1.85 each. Dials were dutiable under the act of 1897 at 40 per cent, but were now made dutiable at 3 cents per dial and 40 per cent.

Zinc-bearing ore was provided for in new paragraph 193 at from one-fourth of a cent to 1 cent per pound on the zinc contained therein when more than 10 per cent.

Zinc in blocks or pigs, etc., was reclassified in paragraph 194, being dutiable at 1½ instead of 1½ cents per pound. Zinc in sheets was made 1½ cents per pound when not coated, etc., in place of 2 cents per pound.

Cans, boxes, etc., were made dutiable at 4 cents per pound and 35 per cent but not less than 55 per cent.

Bottle caps were made dutiable in new paragraph 196 at one-half cent per pound and 45 per cent when not colored, etc., and 55 per cent when colored, etc.

Cash registers, sewing machines, etc., covered in paragraph 197, are also an addition to the list. The paragraph in question gave them rates of from 30 to 45 per cent in place of 45 per cent under the act of 1897.

In paragraph 198 of the act of 1909 nippers and pliers were made dutiable at 8 cents per pound and 40 per cent as against 45 per cent as unenumerated manufactures under the act of 1897. This was equivalent to an increase of about one-fourth.

The results of these changes worked out in equivalent ad valorems for 1905, 1910, and 1911 are shown under corresponding paragraphs of H. R. 18642 in Appendix A.

CHANGES MADE BY H. R. 18642.

for 1905, 1910, and 1911 are shown under corresponding paragraphs of H. R. 18642 in Appendix A.

CHANGES MADE BY H. R. 18642.

In framing the present revision of the metal schedule, the committee has adopted the general principle of reducing all duties to a revenue basis, so far as practicable, except in those cases where more cogenic considerations than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Garden considerations than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Garden considerations than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Garden considerations than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Garden considerations of the fiscal policy of the Garden consideration of

SCHEDULE C AND THE REVENUE.

SCHEDULE C AND THE REVENUE.

In 1911 Schedule C produced only 6.07 per cent of the total tariff revenue of that year. This was the sixth position in the order of importance as a revenue producer in the 14 tariff schedules. In 1894 this schedule produced 13.73 per cent, 8.43 per cent in 1896, 3.86 per cent in 1899, 5.59 per cent in 1905, and 6.84 per cent in 1910. The percentage of our imports to domestic consumption of Iron and steel manufactures is comparatively small and the exports are rapidly increasing. Our manufacturers are splendidly equipped to supply not only the domestic market but to compete in the world's markets, and this they are doing at the present time.

Under these conditions the most important feature to be kept in mind in revising Schedule C in the interest of the general public is that the rates be made truly competitive as far as possible; that is, that they be made low enough to permit potential competition from imports for the sake of natural and proper regulation of domestic prices. Such competition will properly encourage imports, affect domestic prices in the interest of the people, and encourage increased consumption and production by making more nearly normal the conditions of supply and demand. It is believed that the rates provided for in the bill (H. R. 18642) are competitive, and if enacted would effect a substantial economy to the people greatly disproportionate in its advantages to the small apparent loss in revenue.

The estimates of imports for the first fiscal year under the bill H. R. 18642 have been made by an expert of the Treasury Department from a careful study of the imports of the past, more especially those in the last five years, an effort being made to give due consideration to the effect on the imports which may be made by the indicated changes in the duties as well as the present condition of the industry.

The total estimates from all the articles carried by the bill indicate probable imports during the first 12-month period under H. R. 18642 of 377,952,000 and

The total revenue produced by Schedule C during the seven-year period covered by this table is $127,962,672 gross. These figures include a total drawback during the seven years of $18,949,668, thus making the net revenue for the period $109,013,004, a yearly average of $15,573,286.

During the period covered by Table 9 the total revenue derived from tin plate, terneplate, and taggers tin amounted to $13,227,231, while the drawback on this item of the schedule amounted to $13,021,863, thus indicating a net revenue from this item of only $205,368 for the seven years.

The amount of drawback paid on articles covered by Schedule C in 1911, as shown in Table 9, was $2,531,496, out of the total revenue, as officially reported, of $18,819,349, leaving the net revenue from this schedule for 1911 as $16,287,853. The large loss from drawbacks in this schedule is due chiefly to that paid on tin plate, which in 1911 amounted to $1,461,479, out of the total drawback for the schedule of $2,531,496.

As already stated, it is believed that the revision of the tariff rates made by H. R. 18642 would, if enacted into law, have the effect of greatly extending the zone in which the manufacture of tin plate will be conducted in this country, and this, with other conditions now in formation in the industry, will result in a great saving to the net revenue to be produced by this schedule under H. R. 18642.

Comprehensive statistical data are presented in connection with each paragraph of the bill H. R. 18642, published as Appendix A, while in Appendix C are shown comparable tariff rates on metals and manufactures thereof in foreign countries. From these foreign tariffs, pages 84–93, it will be seen that the rates in most of the foreign countries on articles of the same general description as those included in Schedule C are lower than those fixed in H. R. 18642. This is conspicuously true in Belgium and in the Netherlands, while the rates levied by Germany are for the most part much lower than those proposed by this bill. The duties in the French tariff are in some instances higher than those in H. R. 18642, while in others the comparison is close. Somewhat the same is true of Italy. High rates are assessed in Russia, where the industry has not reached an advanced state of development. It is a noteworthy fact that in Canada, where a strong endeavor is being made to build up the iron and steel industry by means of a distinctly protective policy, the general range of duties is lower than that of H. R. 18642.

FRAMING AND PHRASEOLOGY OF THE BILL.

It has been the purpose of the committee in framing H. R. 18642 to conform as nearly as practicable to the phraseology of the act of 1900 and to change the wording and classifications of Schedule C only where actually necessary to eliminate unnecessary provisions and complexities. The bil is an amendment of the existing tariff act and leaves undisturbed the administrative provisions of the act of 1909. The warehouse provision (sec. 2) conforms to the corresponding provision of the act of 1909 (sec. 29), except that the provision for levying duties based on weight at the time of the entry of the merchandise is omitted, since the bill H. R. 18642 provides for no duties based on weight. Under this warehouse provision, as in the present act, articles in warehouse when the bill H. R. 18642 shall take effect, on which duties have not been paid, shall be subject to duty when withdrawn as if they had been imported after the date of the effectiveness of the act; but articles in warehouse on which duties have been paid and a permit of delivery issued shall be subject to the duties in force prior to the enactment of the new bill.

APPENDIX A.

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutulla), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 117 to 199, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

NOTES

TES.—
1880: Rails for railway, of steel, $47,490, includes both steel and iron rails, viz, steel rails $14,744, iron rails $32,746.
1885: Rails for railways, of steel, $248,685, includes steel rails $206,401 and iron rails $42,284; saws, $1,108,474, includes tools, not separately stated.
1890: Rails of steel, $346,104, includes steel rails $315,081, iron rails $31,023; saws, $1,865,603, includes tools not separately stated.
1895: Rails for railways, of steel, $309,869, includes steel rails $266,773 and iron rails $43,096; saws, $1,984,612, includes tools not separately stated.
1900: Rails for railways, of steel, $9,356,448, includes steel rails $9,218,144 and iron rails $138,304
1905: Rails for railways, of steel, includes iron rails $3,096.
1911: Hoop, band, and scroll iron was included under "All other manufactures of."

APPENDIX C.

Average ad valorem duties on metals and metal manufactures in specified countries.

[Prepared by Bureau of Manufactures, Department of Commerce and Labor.]

The first column serves to indicate the general grouping of the articles in the table. Whenever necessary, variations from the wording appear under the individual countries. Subdivisions are similarly shown; when made for one or more countries, the absence of a corresponding subdivision for other countries is due to lack or incomparability of statistical data. In many of the tariffs the term "iron" includes steel, whenever separate rates are not provided for steel. Numbers in parenthesis refer to the paragraphs of the tariffs of the respective countries.

The rates are based on statistical returns of 1909, with the exception of Canada, for which the statistics are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1910. The French tariff was revised in 1910, but no adequate statistical basis for calculating the ad valorem equivalent of the new rates is yet available.

For Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy the amounts of duty were first calculated from the quantities and the rates of duty, and then divided by the official values of the corresponding articles or groups of articles; in the case of Austria-Hungary, conventional rates were applied throughout. For Belgium, except when the combination of several statistical numbers was necessary, the ad valorem equivalent was ascertained by dividing the rate of duty by the unit value officially assigned. For the Netherlands all metals, not free of duty, are subject to ad valorem rates; hence, no calculation was required. For France, Canada, Russia, and Spain the rates in the table were obtained by dividing the value of the imports of the various articles or groups of articles into the corresponding amounts of duty levied.

In the Canadian statistics declared values are shown; likewise in the statistics of the Netherlands for articles subject to ad valorem rates of duty, and in the statistics of Russia for most articles. The statistics for the other countries embraced in the table represent official values.

Differences in classification, in valuation, and in statistical method re are as follows:

Germany.—Temporary imports are included in the value, but not in the duty; hence, such imports are treated as free of duty, with a consequent reduction in the ad valorem equivalents as compared with the returns for the other countries represented.

France.—Imports from the Free Zone, but not from the French colonies and protectorates are included.

Austria-Hungary.—No allowance is made for temporary imports nor articles of Austro-Hungarna origin reimported.

Canada.—The averages cover all imports, including those subject to the British preferential rates of duty. The abbreviation "n.o.p." signifies "not otherwise provided for" in the tariff or commercial statistics.

Belgium.—No allowance is made for temporary imports nor for shipbuilding materials.

Nethclands.—All articles included in the table are either exempt from duty or subject to ad valorem rates; consequently no use of commercial statistics was necessary.

Russia.—Duties are shown in separate columns for the whole Empire and for imports over the European frontier (not including imports from Finland). The preferential treatment of imports from Finland and the reductions of duty and exemptions accorded imports over the Asiatic frontier necessitated this course.

Spain.—No allowance is made for temporary imports, government supplies, nor shipbuilding materials.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, January 27, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Earle Wilfley, of Washington, D. C., as follows:

Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for life, for liberty, for the right to do those things which shall please Thee and make for the good of our fellow men. We ask to-day for Thy guidance in all things, in word and in deed and in life; to help us to see the great things of life, the higher and the better things, and at all times to try to be worthy of Thee and of Thy care of us. Bless, we pray Thee, all in authority, all who have the responsibility of government in their hands; and may that responsibility meet with an execution of laws, a devising of ways and means, and the doing of those things which shall mean for better government, for broader and truer liberty, and for the mercy and the blessing of Almighty God. We ask it for Thy name's sake.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PROPERTY VALUATIONS AND INCOMES OF INDIANS (H. DOC. NO. 486).

. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a tabulated statement prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing the property valuations and incomes of Indians at the end of the feed year 1011.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the statistics which he mentions. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not understand what the document was.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It shows the property valuations and incomes of the Indians in the various reservations and States of the United States. It is a matter of a great deal of importance to our committee, to the House, and to the general

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, House joint resolution 219 was referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws. I ask that the reference be changed, and that it be referred to the Committee on Rules. I ask merely a change of reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to change the reference of House joint resolution 219 from the Committee on Revision of the Laws to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. What is the resolution?

Mr. WATKINS. It asks for the appointment of a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States. It ought to go to the Committee on Rules. It is similar to other resolutions that have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules. They ought all to go there together.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the Committee on the Revision of the Laws report the resolution? If it goes to the Committee on Rules it probably will never be reported.

Mr. WATKINS. It is of the same character as other reso lutions that have been referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909; and, pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the bill do now close, and on that motion I demand the previous ques-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18642; and pending that he moves that all general debate on that bill close in Committee of the Whole, and on that motion demands the previous question. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will say "aye"; those op-Those in favor posed "no.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the previous question will answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay" when their names are called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 105, answered "present" 6, not voting 118, as follows:

Mr. BUCHANAN. I voted in the affirmative. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if the gentleman from New York, Mr. FAIRCHILD, has voted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. FAIR-

CHILD, voted in the negative.

Mr. HOBSON. I desire to change my vote, and to vote "aye."
Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Stevens, voted on this roll call?

The SPEAKER. He has not voted.

The SPÉAKER. He has not voted. .

Mr. ADAMSON. I voted in the affirmative. I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Stevens, and I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. PADGETT. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Foss, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a pair with the gentleman. I voted "aye." I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. PEPPER. I have been paired with the gentleman. As he has voted, I desire to change my vote, and to vote "aye."

Mr. PEPPER. I have been paired with the gentleman. As he has voted, I desire to change my vote, and to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening for his name?

Mr. PEPPER. I was.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. Pepper, and he voted "aye."
Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Pepnsylvania, Mr. Hartman, is recorded as voting? The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. KINDRED. I voted in the affirmative. I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. MANN. I ask recognition for 20 minutes' debate, under clause 3 of Rule XXVII, which reads:

When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for 40 minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition; and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

Mr. Speaker, originally a motion to suspend the rules was not debatable, and yet it has been held that after a second was ordered debate was in order. The Manual says, on page 440:

And after a second is ordered debate is allowed, even though the question would not be debatable under other rules of the House.

This motion, of course, was not debatable until the previous question was ordered, but the plain rule is that when the previous question is ordered, where no debate has been had on the proposition, then the right to debate 40 minutes, 20 minutes on a side, is preserved to those for and against the proposition under the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the unbroken precedents, as I understand the rules, are that a motion to close debate is not debatable. I moved the previous question on the motion to close debate not for the purpose of cutting off debate but for the purpose of cutting off amendment.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that if the motion to close debate were a debatable motion, the gentleman from Illinois would undoubtedly be correct in his point of order, but the motion to close debate is not debatable under any circumstances whatever, and therefore the point of order is over-ruled. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that general debate be closed. All those in favor of closing general debate will say "aye"——
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 108, answered "present" 2, not voting 122, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan for three days on account of important business.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18642, to revise the metal schedule.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18642, to revise the metal schedule, with Mr. Floyd of Arkansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate is closed on the bill. The bill will now be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 117 to 199, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. PLICKED of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, L. offen the fellowed.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, and the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 5 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is not yet in order. I have an amendment that I would like to offer to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment that I wish to offer to the paragraph just read.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, if my amendment will remain as it is, to the gentleman from Colorado offering his amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order to offer an amendment as a new item until the paragraph which has been read has been perfected and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 3, page 2, change the period to a colon and add

At the end of line 3, page 2, change the period to a colon and add the following:

"Provided, That whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whose duty it shall be to make the necessary investigations and report his findings to the President from time to time and to the Congress annually, unless otherwise requested, shall, after the 1st day of January, 1913, report to the President that 10 per cent or more of the labor required to produce any article or product made dutiable under the previsions of this act is performed by persons who are required to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day, unforeseen emergency or unavoidable accident excepted, thereupon and thereafter, upon proclamation to this effect by the President, such article or product shall be admitted without the payment of any tariff duties whatever; and such article or product shall not be restored to the duties fixed by law upon the same until the President shall be satisfied by the showing of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that the condition herein mentioned no longer exists."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment upon the ground that it is not This bill is an amendment to what is commonly called the Payne tariff bill. The Payne tariff bill, it is true, has administrative features in the bill, and the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Colorado relates to the administrative portions of the Payne Act. The bill under consideration does not, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado is therefore not germane to an amendment to the dutiable sections of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it will be useless for me to attempt to argue a point of order against the floor leader, but I shall nevertheless submit the observation that the amendment is merely a limitation or condition imposed upon the levying of these duties and is in a measure similar to the maximum and minimum clause of the Payne bill. It specifies a condition under which, when found to exist, the duty shall not be imposed. I am therefore at a loss to understand why such a limitation or condition is not entirely germane to the subject matter to which it refers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly.

MOORE of Pennsylvania. . There was some confusion while the gentleman's amendment was being read and I did not catch its full purport. Do I understand the purpose of the amendment to be that the Government of the United States. shall inform itself and provide that no commodity shall come into the country where the workmen abroad have worked more than eight hours a day?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No, sir; the purpose of the amendment is directly contrary; it is to admit free of duty into this country any articles in the production of which in this country 10 per cent or more of the employees are required to work more than eight hours a day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it has no reference—
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It simply puts things on the free list where the eight-hour day is not observed in this country; that is what it does exactly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I caught that; but it has no reference, then, to those products of foreign manufacture coming into this country upon which the foreign labor worked for more than eight hours?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; this is to secure to the laborer of this country the blessings and benefits of the eighthour day, and, in my judgment, it is a strong and effective method of securing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it has no thought of protecting the American laborer who works eight hours a day against the competition of the foreign laborer who works more than eight hours a day?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That would simply help the American manufacturer; but you write this provision of mine into the law and the American laborer will get his eight-hour day all right. Mr. MANN. They might not get that; they might not get any work at all.

Mr. KENDALL. I am entirely in sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman, but I want to inquire if his amendment if adopted will not present to the American manufacturer the alternative of limiting his labor to eight hours or not taking advantage of the protection which is implied in the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think it would, with the result that the American manufacturer would establish the eight-hour day.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any protection in the bill? Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that gentlemen are not discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair hear anybody on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is a bill effecting the duties in the main of the metal schedule of the tariff law or proposing a new tariff law. Under our right as a legislative body we can provide that there shall be no duty upon those articles or that there shall be an excessive duty upon the articles or fix the duty as we please, and I maintain that under that right we can put such limitations as we please upon the articles coming into the country affecting the rate of duty. We can say that the duty shall be 1 per cent, we can say that the rate of duty shall be 1,000 per cent. We can say, in my judgment, that the rate of duty shall be 1,000 per cent under certain conditions and 1 per cent under certain other conditions, or that there shall be a duty imposed under certain conditions and no duty imposed under other conditions. Chair holds otherwise, the Chair decides that the House of Representatives abandons its legislative jurisdiction and that only the Committee on Ways and Means can legislate. This amendment now proposed would clearly have been in order upon the bill as originally introduced, would have been in order for the committee to have reported it as a committee amendment, and if the introducer of a bill can include it in his bill, or the committee can put it in the committee bill, can it be said that the House of Representatives, it having the constitutional power over the tariff, can not amend the bill and insert the identical provision which the introducer might have inserted or which the committee might have reported in the bill? If we have that power to fix the tariff rates and the power of making the rate nothing or no duty, then we have all the power be-tween the two, and that includes the power either to admit free under limitations or dutiable under limitations. Chair will not rule that the House of Representatives by the adoption of the so-called new and reform rules has entirely abandoned its legislative power and transferred it to the gentleman from Alabama. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois says that if the Payne bill was before this House for enactment that this motion would be in order. So far he is correct in that it would be in order to the administrative features of the Payne bill, but the gentleman who offers the amendment admits that it would properly come under the maximum-and-minimum clause of the Payne bill. Now, we are attempting to amend the Payne bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I did not state that. Mr. MANN. And I did not state the other proposition that the gentleman is quoting.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I said this amendment was a condition or limitation attached to the law, somewhat similar to the maximum-and-minimum clause of the Payne bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is why I say the gentleman puts himself out of court, because it is somewhat similar to the maximum-and-minimum clause, and the maximum-and-minimum clause is in the administrative features of the act, and therefore an amendment of this kind to be germane must be germane to the administrative features of the Payne bill. This amendment is no more germane to this section that is presented to the House-the schedule on metals-than would an amendment amending the sugar schedule be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] permit a question? Will he state whether or not there is any such administrative feature in this bill as that which exists in the present law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. This bill only amends the dutiable rates of the Payne bill. There is no administrative feature in it, and the administrative features of the Payne bill are not touched in any way whatever.

Mr. MANN. The administrative features in the Payne law affect every item in this bill, and it would have been in order when the Payne bill was before the House to have offered a maximum-and-minimum provision to every item in the bill. As a matter of convenience only it was inserted in one place in the bill covering all items, but it would have been in order with every item of the bill, because it affects every item in the bill, and the administrative features affect every item in this bill, and hence it is in order in the consideration of this bill, fixing anew the rates of duty, to provide those provisions which are now in the Payne law. Would it be said that we could change the rate of duty by a new bill but could not effect a method of collecting the duty provided in the bill? The proposition seems to me, at least, so plain that it does not require argument, nor has the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] attempted to argue the question or to cite any precedent in regard to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like another minute before the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This is a bill to levy certain rates of duty on certain described articles-metals and manufactures of metals-and this bill is a complete piece of legislation without any reference whatever to the Payne bill or any other act of Congress. So far as the purposes, so far as the operation and effectiveness, of this bill are concerned all reference can be stricken out as to the Payne bill, all reference can be omitted, leaving this a completed piece of legislation and standing on its own bottom. It strikes me the one question to decide—
Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Colorado would read the enacting clause he would see that this is an amendment to the Payne law.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It says first: The following rates of duty shall be levied, etc.

And it then continues that the act shall be substituted for certain sections of the Payne bill, but I will say, if the Chairman pleases, that to all practical intents and purposes and so far as the amendment under consideration is concerned, that feature of the bill is purely surplusage; that this bill will supplant the Payne bill, whether it says so in express terms or not. The mere enactment of the rates in this act would supplant the rates in the Payne bill.

Now, Mr. Chaimman, there is a great deal of merit to this proposition. Gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber are very profuse in their protestations for labor, and one of the great mooted questions of all tariff legislation is whether or not labor gets any benefit out of the tariff, and it is very evident that a great many gentlemen would be inclined to break over from their party attachments and strain a point to help labor if they thought the laborer got a fair portion of the benefit of tariff legislation. My amendment presents a simple and effective method of helping labor to share in the benefits. One thing, Mr. Chairman, is perfectly evident, and that is that you can not reduce the wages of labor in this country. The wages of labor in this country have been ground down to bedrock—a mere living wage.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And that wage, Mr. Chairman, can not go lower. You can help labor only by limiting the hours

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] makes the point of order that the gentleman from Colorado is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say that if gentlemen want to dispose of this meritorious proposition by means of points of order that will be their own lookout. I am not responsible for that,

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Supposing that 85 per cent of the people of this country engaged in manufacturing a certain article are working on an eight-hour schedule and 15 per cent refuse to go on an eight-hour schedule. Under such conditions would the gentleman have the article admitted free of duty, so as to affect all alike?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Under those conditions the article would go on the free list. But the gentleman knows as well as I do that nearly all of the articles and products affected by this act, and in fact by all tariff legislation, are so monopolized and so trustized that if this condition is found to obtain as to 10 per cent of the work, it would probably be found also to obtain as to 20 per cent and 30 per cent and 40 per cent and 50 per cent. As to that, however, the percentage named is tentative. I would want the requirement to operate as lightly as possible to the detriment of employers who wanted to treat their employees and laborers justly and admit them to a participation in the benefits of tariff legislation; but in my judgment, under the present lack of competition, industrial conditions, the observance of the condition may be safely put up to the employer. After all, the percentage is only tentative; and if, after consideration, it should be found that 20 per cent or 25 per cent would be fairer, then the author of the provision would have no objection to changing it. The idea is entirely new, so far as I know, and maybe some other per cent would be the proper measure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado if he will accept a slight amendment to his proposition?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may if I can get my amendment before the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is this:

Provided. That the same articles shall not be imported free if made by foreign labor required to work exceeding eight hours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this discussion is not being confined to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment and have the Chair rule on that at the same time. I desire to ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] if he will accept this amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made against the amendment. The Chair is ready to pass upon the pending

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide on the point of order. This proposed amendment relates to the first paragraph of the pending bill, and it refers to certain administrative features in the existing law, as I understand it, and there are no such administrative features in this bill. Now, under Rule XXI, section 3, it is provided:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill, nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

Now, in the view of the Chair, this amendment does not come within the provisions of that rule, so that the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. On that ruling, Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. This is not an administrative feature of the bill at all. This is a proposition to determine the rate of duty, or to determine whether the goods shall be exempted from duty. It requires administration to collect duties; it requires administration, whatever the bill provides. But the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is not an administrative feature of the bill. It is a limitation, fixing whether goods come in free of duty or not. That is merely descriptive of the character of goods-Mr. KENDALL. That shall be admitted—

Mr. MANN. Yes; descriptive of goods that shall be admitted free of duty. And when, under the new rules of the House, the Chair rules that the House has abandoned its legislative authority and can not perfect a bill, and can not determine what, goods shall come in free and what goods shall come in dutiable, he has usurped the powers of the House, he and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, more autocratically than ever was done before in the history of the Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. NEEDHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the judgment of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee on an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. This amendment was not presented to the Ways and Means Committee. It was never brought up for consideration by anyone until it was presented on the floor of this House. has been no opportunity to consider it-

Mr. MANN. In caucus?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Either in caucus, in committee, or in the House. We do not know whether it is carefully prepared, whether it is correct legislation.

Mr. MANN. Why not consider it here?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will excuse me, there is no way to determine whether it is wise legislation or carefully prepared legislation. The purpose of the rule was to prevent exactly what is happening here now, and that is to prevent amendments being offered that had not been carefully considered, that had not been wisely considered, and that can not be so considered on the floor. Therefore the rules of this House say that the amendment offered must be germane, not to the bill but to what is in the bill and in the paragraph. And there can be no doubt whatever that the decision of the Chair conforms not only to the rule of this House but to the precedents of this House. I move to close all further debate on this question.

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. WEEKS rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] moves to close all further debate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know whether the gentleman means, by his statement of the rule, that no amendment of this sort can be offered to a bill in this House until it has been previously submitted to a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair is only ruling on one question. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] moves that all debate be closed on this appeal.

Mr. HARRIS. May I have an answer to my parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on closing debate on the appeal.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were-ayes 85, noes 76.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. UNDERwood and Mr. MANN.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 107,

Accordingly the motion to close debate on the appeal was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were—ayes 111, noes 81.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman. Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Un-DERWOOD and Mr. AUSTIN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 114, noes 81.

Accordingly the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. Mr. HILL. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under the ruling of the Chair and the action of the committee thereon, I should like to know whether it is now in order to offer another amendment, providing that the free list shall not be extended to any articles manufactured in a foreign country in the production of which labor has been employed more than eight hours a day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that any Member of the House is at liberty to offer any amendment. The Chair only passes upon these questions when points of order are made. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. HILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "nine," in line 3, page 2, insert:
"Provided, That all articles and all parts of patented articles named herein as exempt from duty, and which are made or sold or are intended to be sold under letters patent issued by the United States of America, if manufactured abroad, shall, when imported into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), pay the rates of duty, upon the entry or withdrawal thereof, to which they were subject prior to the passage of this act, and no such patented articles or parts of patented articles manufactured abroad under any patents issued by any other country shall be admitted free of duty when imported from any country, dependency, or colony which imposes a tax or duty on like articles imported from the United States."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it relates to administrative features of the bill and is not germane to this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HILL. It is not an administrative feature of the bill, and if the gentleman had listened to the reading of it he would have seen it. It relates solely to the duties named in this amendment, and nothing else. It relates to nothing in the general law; it simply relates to specified articles in this amendment, and it provides that they shall be dutiable under certain circumstances.

I had some question when I prepared this amendment this morning as to whether it should not be offered as an amendment or proviso to the free list. I am frank to say that, but I want to say to the chairman of the committee and to the other side that I am not offering the amendment in any captious spirit, but only with a desire to improve the bill, and the Lord knows it needs improvement. I offer it with a desire simply to improve the bill, and I found upon careful consideration that, in my judgment, it should be offered to this part of the bill rather than to the free list.

Let us see:

That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraph of this act upon the articles hereafter enumerated—

Except, and so forth, and the amendment belongs right there. It seems to me that that is the proper place for it; "except cer-

Mr. PALMER. The language would not belong to the enacting clause any more than to the entire free list.

Mr. HILL. It is not providing for a free list. It is providing that there shall not under certain circumstances be a free It means that certain rates shall be provided for except under such-and-such conditions, and it seems to me, after care ful consideration, that it would not be proper to attach that amendment to the free list, but that it would be proper to put it right here where the committee prescribes that the rate of duty of the articles enumerated shall be as follows. And I supplement that by saying "except certain articles."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut. The gentleman's amendment says that it is to line 2, page 2.

Mr. HILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I may not have the same opy. I understand the bill was amended in caucus, and the bill before the House is not the committee bill but the caucus bill. Where I intend to put it is at the end of the clause which provides what the rates of duty shall be.

Mr. MANN. At the end of line 3, page 2.
Mr. HILL. It should come in after the word "nine," line 3, page 2.

Mr. PALMER rose.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman wish to ask a question?

Mr. PALMER. I was going to make some observations to aid the Chair in coming to a proper conclusion on the point of order.

Mr. HILL. I have only one word more. The enacting clause provides that after a certain day the rates of duty prescribed in the paragraph shall be as follows. I provide that that shall be so except in certain cases. That is an there is a fine of the Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. amendment offered by the enacting clause in the bill. If I understand his amendment aright, it is that under certain circumstances certain articles which are covered by the free list in this bill shall be dutiable. Now, it is possible that when we reach the free list in the bill the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut may be germane, although I am not undertaking to foreclose my own judgment on that proposition just now.

Mr. HILL. It is not a restriction of the free list.

Mr. PALMER. I understand that, but the gentleman will observe that if he could put this in as an amendment or restriction into the enacting clause, he should insert at that point as an exception to the articles on which duties shall be paid every article carried in the free list. The Chair will notice, if the Chair reads through the bill, that as each item in the dutiable list is reached, if there are exceptions which take the article out of the dutiable list and place it on the free list, these exceptions are there mentioned. For instance, in the wire clause of the act, wire comes in at a certain rate of duty, but there is a proviso carried in that paragraph providing that barbed and all other fence wire and wire fence and baling wire shall be exempt from duty.

Similarly in the watch paragraph there is a provision requiring that importers of watches shall mark the plate and the movement with certain words indicating the place of origin, etc., and the provision in the law is, as in the present Payne law, that any watch movement which does not bear such a marking shall not be imported at all. It is the consistent, systematic, and scientific arrangement of these matters that make such exceptions as the gentleman undertakes to make here in order at the point in the bill where the particular article is specified.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman's point, then, is that the amendment should be offered when the articles are reached in the dutiable list? Of course it would not be proper in the free list to put a duty on any article. It must be offered when the articles are reached in the dutiable list, like wire and the other things to which he refers?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to decide points of order, but I might say this, that if the gentleman's amendment is in order anywhere, it could only be at some place in the bill where similar articles are specified.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, in reply I have to say that the articles are not specified in the dutiable list and consequently it could not be put there.

Mr. PALMER. There is a dutiable list specified, however.
Mr. HILL. They are specified in the free list, but that is for articles that are free. I want to make the articles dutiable under certain circumstances, and therefore it would not be proper for me from my present standpoint to offer the amendment to the free list. I have studied the case somewhat care-My first thought was to offer it as an amendment to the fully. My first thought was to offer it as an amendment to the free list. I could see no propriety in putting dutiable articles into the free list. I tried to put it into the dutiable list. The articles are not mentioned there. Consequently there was no place for the amendment there, and it seemed to me that I was forced to the point of putting it in the definition clause in the beginning; and I do not see, if it does not go there, how it can go into the bill at all under the suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that while these particular articles are not mentioned in the dutiable list, because they are put on the free list, yet kindred articles with which these have been classified in the tariff laws from the beginning are in the dutiable list; and if there is any place where these articles should carry a duty it would be in the paragraph carrying these kindred articles.

Mr. HILL. There is no kindred article to a patented article, which is a monopoly. The articles are not mentioned in the dutiable list, and therefore must go in the opening clause.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] correctly, it is that you can insert no item under the dutiable list except in connection with a paragraph already in the dutiable list. may have misunderstood the gentleman, but I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not contend that tungstenbearing ores of all kinds being in this bill on the free list could not by the House be put in the dutiable list. That certainly is not the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PALMER. I made no such contention.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman did not make the contention, but his statement covered that, that it must be offered to an item in the bill. Here is a proposition that can not be offered to an item in the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that it is offered as a part of the enacting clause. Not at all. The enacting clause is:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

That is the end of the enacting clause. All the rest is the bill. The next word commences with the definition of the articles to be covered by duties. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if it be claimed that this is obnoxious because it is an administrative feature, then the bill itself contains administrative features. Paragraph 42 of the bill, relating to the tariff on antimony, contains this provision-

Provided, That on all importations of antimony-bearing ores and matte containing antimony the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to preperly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise—and considerably more along the same line-a purely administrative feature of the bill. I call the attention of the Chair to the proviso in paragraph 26 and paragraph 28. I will read one of those paragraphs

Mr. DALZELL. And paragraph 51 also.

Mr. MANN. And a paragraph similar to the one I read a moment ago is paragraph 51. Paragraph 26 relates to pen-

Provided further, That all articles specified in this paragraph shall, when imported, have the name of the maker or purchaser and beneath the same the name of the country of origin die-sunk conspicuously and indelibly on the shank or tang of at least one or, if practicable, each and every blade thereof.

I would not consider that an administrative feature, but it is fully as much an administrative feature as to describe an article as a patented article.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. PALMER. Would the gentleman from Illinois think it would be proper to lift that proviso out of the cutlery section and put it in here, where the gentleman from Connecticut proposes to put his amendment, even if it were germane?

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to understand-and I am sure he does-that there are two ways in which you can insert a provision like this in a bill, either as to every item in the bill, or, if the paragraph is to cover all the items, insert it generally as one item in the bill; but the gentleman from Connecticut, under the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, might offer his amendment to each paragraph of the bill. How futile it would be, how bunglesome it would be, to insert a general provision following each paragraph of the bill. It has always been the custom in enacting a provision where it was intended to cover all the provisions of the bill to provide that by a general provision, but if it is only intended to cover one provision of the bill, then it is offered as a proposition to that specific provision. Here the committee inserts these provisions as to specific paragraphs of committee inserts these provisions as to specific paragraphs of the bill, because they are only intended to apply to those spe-cific paragraphs; but certainly the Chair will not rule that if they had intended to provide that every article in the bill should have the name of the maker conspicuously marked upon the article that it would have to be inserted in connection with each paragraph and could not be inserted as a general paragraph covering all the provisions of the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Alabama stated that no amendment was in order unless it had been previously submitted and passed upon by the Committee on Ways and Means, although I am reliably informed that the Committee on Ways and Means never read the bill. How could the amendment be submitted to that committee when it never read the [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone else desire to be heard? Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, rather than take up the time of the Chair to decide the question, I withdraw the point of order and will let the House vote upon it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized to speak to the amendment. As I said in the beginning, gentlemen, I have not offered this amendment in any captious spirit whatever. I recognize the fact that the countries of Europe invalidate American patents unless the articles which they cover are manufactured in Europe. England does that, I think, unless manufacture is begun within 12 months after the patent is taken out; otherwise the patent becomes invalidated. think that is true in all the countries of Europe; it is certainly true, perhaps with a change of time of one or two years, with Germany and France. This bill provides that certain articles named in the free list, including machine tools which are made under various patents all over the United States, and which is an enormous industry and which uses enormous quantities of metals, both copper, lead, zinc, babbitt metal, and so forth, can be made in Europe and shipped into this country free of duty, not only as to whole machines but as to parts separately. For instance, the cast-iron beds of enormous lathes could be cast in Europe and shipped into the United States free of duty and avoid paying a tax to the United States Government if it was a part of a patented machine. I do not want to see that done.

I do not believe our friends on the other side of the House want to see that done. The ultimate effect of it, and I know the immediate effects of it in two or three other cases, would be to transfer the industries to the other side, where factories are established, and ship the parts into this country and simply have the assembling shops here

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it not the law in foreign countries that domestic as well as foreign patents will be forfeited unless they are used within a limited time?

Mr. HILL. I have so stated. And it is not the law in the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman this in relation to his own amendment: Does that affect domestic patents?

Mr. HILL. No; it does not go to that extent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that patents of foreign countries will not be on the same basis?

Mr. HILL. I did not want to go beyond the strict terms of this law which is now under consideration, and it seemed to me if I attempted to make a change in the patent law under this amendment that I should be offering an amendment which was not germane. But this refers exclusively to the articles named in this bill, namely, that if made or sold under a patent, having a monopoly in the United States, they shall not be admitted free, but shall pay the same rate of duty as heretofore if shipped in and controlled here by a monopoly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The effect of the gentleman's amendment, if it should be enacted into law, would be to abrogate the treaties of the United States which guarantee the foreign patents the same rights and privileges that domestic patents enjoy.

Mr. HILL. No; it would not do that. It would provide two things. First, that American manufacturers who are manufacturing patented articles must manufacture them here or else pay a duty. Under this bill they could bring them in free, even if manufactured abroad. Now, I want to say to the gentleman this, that I am not thinking wholly of goods manufactured in Europe-in England, in Scotland, in France, or in Germanybut I am thinking of the situation right across the border, where we are said to have $200,000,000 of American manufacturing capital to-day employed in making the identical things that can be made here. And it will be just as easy to ship from Toronto or Montreal into the United States free as it is to ship them from Chicago or New York. And this bill as it stands to-day is nothing but a bid for the transfer of American capital into Canada. I do not think it will go to Mexico, but this will transfer it to Canada or to Europe, giving them free admission not only on the finished products, but, what I fear far more, on the finished parts.

In one case of a very large concern in this country they told me last summer, when the free-list bill was pending, they were expecting hereafter and were making arrangements to manufacture parts of their machinery in their factory abroad and ship them to the United States and assemble them here. You do not want that done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object. It is evident that gentlemen on that side of the House are attempting to filibuster.

Mr. MANN. That is not true, and I give fair warning that if unanimous consent is denied in this case there will be no more unanimous consents in this Congress. If the gentlemen who are on the committee are not entitled to 10 minutes on an

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not charging the gentleman from Connecticut with filibustering, but I am charging that unnecessary motions are being made on that side of the House. gentleman desires to have these amendments considered with reasonable debate, I am willing to consent to it. But as to the use of time unnecessarily upon such a question as the question of closing debate or on questions that are not necessary, I intend to apply the rules of the House.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. There has been no filibustering on this side of the House.

A Member. Oh, no! Mr. MANN. Some gentleman is afraid to rise on the floor back there.

We thought we were entitled to a ruling in a very important proposition, and when we think we are entitled to that we shall exercise our rights as we have exercised them in the past. could have had this morning, or anybody on this side of the House could have had, two additional roll calls. We did not exercise our right on that question. If we had been filibustering, we would have had four roll calls this morning instead

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I have no desire in the world to cut off reasonable debate and reasonable opportunity amendments. If that is all that gentlemen on that side of the House want, they shall have it. But if it is an attempt to delay the passage of this bill, I shall insist upon the rules being strictly applied. For the present I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] withdraws his objection. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL. In explanation of my request, Mr. Chairman, will say this: The members of the Committee on Ways and Means were assured that when the bill came up under the fiveminute rule the same generous treatment which was accorded to the minority by the gentleman from Alabama last summer would be accorded to the minority here now, with respect to opportunity for offering amendments, and for that reason I declined to take any time in general debate-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my understanding

Mr. HILL. And I told not only the Republican ranking member that we would not take it, but I suggested to other gentlemen that they should not take it, inasmuch as it was the wish of the gentleman from Alabama that the debate should close speedily, with the understanding that the same generous spirit which was manifested last year when we came to the five-minute rule would be manifested now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in earnest in regard to this amendment. It seems to me it is an exceedingly important amend-It seems to me it will stop the transfer of very large industries from this country to Europe. They will naturally avail themselves of the advantage which is given to them under the terms of this bill and bring in articles made there and parts of articles made there-not patented parts, but parts of patented articles made there-which would absolutely destroy and wipe out the duty on the raw materials which otherwise they would have to pay if the articles were made here; and they will bring such articles here. It would transfer not only to Europe but it would also transfer to Canada a great many of our manufacturing institutions.

I think it would have a very serious effect on the production of agricultural implements, for one thing. I do not agree at all with the position taken by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, just as we adjourned last evening, in regard to the effect of this bill upon agricultural implements. He puts no agricultural implements on the free list of this bill, on the ground that agricultural implements are not found in Schedule C and are not affected, and therefore it would not be proper to put them in here, overlooking the fact that in the free-list bill last year he not only specified certain articles which were specified in the Payne bill, but he also made a basket clause which took in everything covered under section 199, or the basket clause of the same bill; and he has now restored all of these agricultural implements, like wagons, farm carts, and all agricultural tools except those which were specified before in the Payne bill and which do come in under the metal schedule—all of these things are transferred and made dutiable at 25 per cent now under this bill, notwithstanding the solicitude that was manifested by the gentleman for the farmer class last summer.

Now, I do not want to have that done. Furthermore, I do not want to see the products of great trust monopolies manufactured in Canada and sent over here free of duty. I do not want to see the typewriting industry transferred from this country to Europe and the machines made in their factories I do not want to see the cash registers that are now made in Dayton, Ohio, manufactured in European factories and brought here. I know many of these concerns have within the last 12 months seriously considered the transfer of their plants from the Central West to the Atlantic coast. them, which I will not name, but an exceedingly large concern, one of the largest in the United States, making a purely patented monopoly, was negotiating, either authoritatively otherwise, through an agent, to transfer that industry from the Central West into the State in which I live in order to get the advantage of ocean transportation. I do not want to see your Western States stripped of your patented manufactures and see them transferred to the seacoast, with the privilege of bringing all their product into the United States free of duty, and then, under Democratic legislation, maintain the prices, as they could do, with an absolute monopoly under a patent. If you want to do that, then vote against the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this bill should become a law, would we need any cash registers in this country?

Mr. HILL. I am offering the amendment not in any critical spirit but to improve the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hnl].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

HILL) there were—ayes 61, noes 86.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "nine," page 2, line 3:
"Provided, That no article of foreign manufacture upon which labor has been employed for more than eight hours per day shall be admitted into the United States."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, those of us who are protectionists believe sincerely

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Surely the gentleman will serve his point of order upon a question of this importance.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not reserve the point of order. the interest of the bill I shall have to make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sure there are gentlemen on that side of the House who would like to discuss this question. It comes very close to home to many of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The parliamentary question is identical with the one first raised.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of so great and overpowering importance to the working-men of this country, who are put in competition with the lowpaid labor of Europe, that I must appeal from the decision of the Chair if he rules this to be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do; but I understood I was foreclosed by the attitude of the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has a perfect right to discuss the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the point of order, I desire to say that I have drafted this amendment so that it entirely harmonizes with the paragraph to which it is proposed to attach it. I have omitted the word "products" in order that the amendment may harmonize with the word "articles" used in the first paragraph of this bill. The provision is general. It applies as broadly to the subject which constitutes the text of the bill as does the opening paragraph itself, and it seems to me it is germane, particularly in view of the fact that those who propose the bill intend to cut down duties which we say protect labor in the United States. My amendment proposes directly to protect labor against what we believe to be the invasion of foreign imports provided for in this bill. We are presenting a contradiction to the bill itself in this amendment, and simply putting the question up to the House whether we shall have the opportunity to say no to your affirmative proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Under Rule XXI, paragraph 3, no amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting the revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill. As the Chair understands, there is nothing in the entire text of the bill relating to that proposition embodied in the amendment. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to give gentlemen notice on that side. I stated before that this identical question had been raised once this morning and had been decided on appeal, and if gentlemen insist on that procedure the debate must be limited to five minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. I did not know that anybody was going to debate it, but I want to say that if we are to be run over we will certainly kick while being run over. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama and to the House that if a Member on this side who presents an amendment in good faith, which he believes to be for the welfare of the wage earners of this country, is to be regarded as insincere because the committee on the other side brings in a report which is to be acted upon without debate, then we are operating in this House under what is virtually gag rule [applause on the Republican side], and the voice of the voting man is not heard here. There are labor leaders in this House upon that side as well as upon this who are continually asking that the eight-hour law in this country be enforced. Now, you bring in a measure upon which no debate is to be allowed, you, who are a majority in control of the House, and when a Member, rising in his place on this side, offers to discuss a question of vital interest to the workingmen of this country you say that he is not sincere and you do not propose to hear him. I think this will come home to

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman has been a long time a Member of this House; he was a Member when the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed. Did he ever introduce an amendment of this kind before?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have voted in favor of the eight-hour amendments, and I ask the other side for the same support that I have given their measures.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman answer; did he ever offer his amendment to the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I voted for the Payne tariff bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Did the gentleman offer this amendment or a similar one to the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer this amendment now in good faith because I believe that it is in the interest of the workingmen.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But the gentleman does not answer my question, and does he not know that he does not and that he is playing buncombe politics, with a smile on his face, while we are trying to argue the question? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, which brings in a bill which I believe is vital to the interests of the working people of this country, mean to tell me that I have a smile on my face and am not sincere in wanting to take care of the interests of the workingmen of this country?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I say that when the gentleman's own party was in power, and when his own party presented a bill that became odious all through this country, he did not offer this amendment to that bill, and when I put the question to him whether he did he has a cynical expression on his face any of my time?

which I take to be a smile; at any rate, it shows that he is not sincere. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is keeping in good humor and trying to discuss the matter in a manner that befits a Member of this House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has good will in his heart and love for his fellow members, and an interest in the welfare of the working men of his country as well.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In the manifestly deep-seated love which the gentleman bears to us all, will he kindly and specifically answer my question: When the Payne bill was before this House did the gentleman offer the amendment which he

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not offer the amendment to the Payne tariff bill, but in view of the fact that the gentleman from Missouri has referred to that "nefarious" and "odious" measure, as he calls the Payne tariff bill, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the only spokesman on the other side of the House in support of the measure now before us, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] told us yesterday of the marvelous development of this country, the great growth of industries and the wealth created, all of which came under the Payne and Dingley tariff bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] the gentleman wants to ask any more questions about that "nefarious" bill that built up this country he may do so. Does he want to destroy the industries that we want to protect?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Did the Payne-Aldrich or the Dingley bill contain such a provision as the gentleman is offering to put into this one?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It did not. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman was here, and why did he not try to put it on that bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would ask the gentleman whether if the provision had been in the Dingley or the Payne tariff bills the gentleman from Missouri would have voted for either of those bills? Will the gentleman answer that question, categorically, yes or no? Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not answer.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not answer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why does not the gentleman answer?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am not playing politics. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have regarded the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, as sincere, and I have always regarded the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, since I have been in the House, as sincere in presenting a measure. I have no thought that the gentlemen are playing politics when they bring this bill into the House. I believe they want it to pass, and if they do, and are not putting it up to us so that the Republican President can veto it, why in the name of heaven do they not open wide the doors and let us discuss it

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman is discussing it now in violation of the rules of the House, and I do not see why he should complain.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think I have some time remaining.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order, that the discussion now going on is not germane to the question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that the discussion now proceeding is not germane to the question before the committee. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair rule that this proposition can not be further debated?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Being entitled to the floor, am I not permitted to concede some of my time? Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How much time has the gentleman? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is entitled to the floor to discuss the question before the committee, and that is the question of the appeal from the decision of the Chair. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Am I not permitted to yield

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is permitted to yield time, but there is so much confusion and so many gentlemen are clamoring for recognition that the Chair has been trying to restore order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the Chair was about to put the question, as I understood, and that prompted my inquiry whether time was still under my control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania under the five-minute rule has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recog-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether, under the question as it is now pending before the committee, an appeal from a decision of the Chair, I am limited to five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the holding of the Chair. We are proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. GARNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I again respectfully present this parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we not now considering an appeal from a decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And on that appeal, have we not passed from the five-minute rule to the hour rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania can show any authority for that, the Chair It is the opinion of the Chair that we are will hear him. operating under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Chair rules that the gentleman from Pennsylvania having concluded five minutes, is now out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we ought to recognize the fact that this is an appeal from the decision of the Chair ruling out of order a certain amendment; and I submit to my friend from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] that the questions he has been propounding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania have no bearing upon the point of order that we are now called upon to decide, and that we must decide in voting upon this appeal. The Chair has held that this particular motion is out of order. The motion to amend offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in the nature of an administrative feature of the bill. I can not understand upon what ground the Chair has held the motion to be out of order. It is immaterial now, in deciding this question, whether any man is in favor of the motion upon its merits or not. We ought to decide the question as to whether it is in order as a parliamentary proposition. Now, if you take the pending bill, page 10, line 13, you will find there an administrative provision. It Provided. That all articles specified in this paragraph shall, when imported, have the name of the maker or purchaser and beneath the same the name of the country of origin, etc.

This amendment is a certain restriction as to administration on certain articles unless certain conditions have been complied with and have been shown to exist. You have in the provision that I have read a similar administrative provision, You have in the so that if this amendment is out of order the provision that I have read is subject to the point of order, and I have no doubt there are many other similar provisions in this bill. We ought not to decide the question simply because we are opposed to an amendment or perchance are afraid to go on record in voting on that amendment, but the question ought to be decided upon the parliamentary law as applying to the question now before us. It seems to me that the Chair, with all due respect, is entirely wrong in this ruling, and if he is right, then he must hold out of order every provision that is in the bill or offered as an amendment that goes in any degree to any administrative feature of the bill as it applies to particular items included in this bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that your position can be substantiated by any parliamentary authority. It seems plain, and I have no doubt that when we get to page 10, if the point of order were made against the proviso I have read, the point of order would be overruled and the House would consider it rightly so, and if that is right, then you ought to be consistent and vote to overrule the Chair in this particular decision and hold that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word here in behalf of some Members of the House on this question who are neither to be praised nor blamed for what past Congresses have done. There are new Members in this House who desire to vote upon some of these questions and to express their opinions, and I stand here now feeling that I have a right to vote upon these propositions and not be gagged in the start and not have a chance to express my opinion. It seems to me that the ruling of the Chair is not proper to be sustained and ought not to be sustained. Now, I think that in this House new Members, at least having for the first time in our history a chance to do so, should be given an opportunity to record a vote upon vital questions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I be indulged for just one moment before the Chair makes a decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided, the question is on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the

"ayes" seemed to have it.
On a division (demanded by Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 105, noes 63.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the decision of the committee.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no amendment pending. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the gentleman from Colorado has no amendment pending.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Very well, then, I will offer this as an amendment to follow line 3, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 3, by inserting after the word "nine" the following:

following:

"Iron ore, including manganiferous ore and the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 15 cents per ton: Provided, That in levying and collecting the duty on iron ore no deduction shall be made from the weight of the ore on account of moisture which may be chemically or physically combined therewith."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman to offer that as a new paragraph at this place.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Yes. Mr. Chairman, this is the provision of existing law. If I offered the amendment which I think ought to be offered, I should make the rate much higher; but this is the provision in the present law, and I know it is the very best that can be expected from the present Congress, and I wish very briefly to call the attention of the committee to a few facts. The chief producer of iron ore, aside from the United States, which comes to this country is the island of Cuba. Now, just a word as to the cost of production here and in Cuba.

In the late report of Herbert Knox Smith on the cost of Lake Superior iron ore, I find, on page 76, that he states the average cost of iron ore at Lake Erie ports from the Lake Superior district was $2.70 a ton. And he then gives a table showing the exact cost of the United States Steel Corporation, which furnishes the cheapest ore from that district. He shows that that ore at Lake Erie ports costs $2.40 a ton-$1.21 for mining, 40 cents actual cost of rail freight, 61 cents lake freight, and 18 cents general charges. The freight from there to Pittsburgh is 96 cents. Of course, the steel corporation has its own railroad, and some deduction ought to be made for actual cost of transportation. Suppose we throw off the 36 cents, and we have $3 in Pittsburgh. We all know that Pittsburgh is the great mart for iron ore.

Now, let us look at the Cuban situation. I was talking day before yesterday with a very distinguished mining engineer, one very familiar with Lake Superior conditions, who has spent many months examining the Cuban ore deposits, and he is a gentleman of such character that he has been selected by the Bureau of Mines to prepare a monograph on the mining of iron ore throughout the world. He tells me that the Cuban iron ore from the Mayari district can be mined and placed in boats for 25 cents a ton; that the companies now mining there have an offer from a steamship company to put on a line of boats to transport that ore for 50 cents a ton to Sparrows Point. The rail rate from there to Bethlehem is 50 cents, making the cost of ore at Bethlehem $1.25. The rate now to Pittsburgh is $1.50, making the cost there $2.25. But, sirs, I am also informed that the railroads have already consented to a substantial reduction in the $1.50 rate. Now, this means

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Young] may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Now, then, against this situation must be taken the fact that the Lake Superior ores run about 50 per cent in iron and Cuban ores 40 per cent in iron. But this is sufficient to show that in this great market at Pittsburgh, at the foot of the Allegheny Mountains, this Cuban ore can meet the Lake Superior ore on more than even terms.

The condition of the New York mines is even worse. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that it was the intention in this bill to enlarge the zone somewhat in which foreign products could come into this country, but I wish to submit to him that that zone as to iron ore is already sufficiently large. No Lake Superior ore and scarcely any New York ore has been sold along the Atlantic seaboard for years even when the tariff was 40 cents a ton. If you wish a protective tariff, then there ought to be some duty on iron ore.

And I wish to say a word to my Democratic friends. From the foundation of this Government until the present time there has been a duty on iron ore. Political parties have come and political parties have gone, but never has it been attempted before to take all duty off of iron ore. There ought to be a duty on it for revenue purposes alone, if for nothing else. Why? Because it will come in in large quantities, anyway, for use along the Atlantic seaboard and for a considerable distance west. There are immense bodies there. It is bound to come in, and the Government might just as well have a reasonable revenue from it.

Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. PALMER

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

PALMER] is recognized.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, in writing this bill we have had two purposes in mind; first, to lighten the burden of taxation now resting on the people by reason of the operation of the Payne law, and, second, to raise as much revenue at least as the Payne law was able to raise for the purpose of the operation of the Government. We firmly believe, Mr. Chairman, that in presenting this bill, so far as this schedule goes, we have accomplished both of those purposes. Of course, it is true that there are exceptional cases where, in order to lighten the burden of taxation upon the people, we must sacrifice revenue. And there are similarly other exceptional cases where, in order to raise the necessary amount of revenue, we must add to the bur-den of taxation. We feel that as far as iron ore is concerned, by placing it upon the free list, we do an act of simple justice and fairness to the manufacturers in America and at the same time make it possible that the final consumer of the articles which are manufactured from that ore will benefit in the price of their product.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. PALMER. I want to take only five minutes on this, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I presume the gentleman is familiar with the testimony of Mr. Schwab, given before the Committee on Ways and Means when he appeared to favor taking the duty off from iron ore, when he said that in his opinion it would not lower the cost of any manufactured product to the consumer if it were done?

Mr. PALMER. I understand that is Mr. Schwab's opinion about the final cost to the consumer. But Mr. Schwab is not the only manufacturer of steel and iron in this country who is affected by this provision in this act. That might definitely and finally understood right now. The fact is that nearly all of the independent people in the iron and steel business are necessarily interested in this proposition. The big people, as for example the Steel Corporation, have practically an absolute control of the American ore beds to-day, not only by ownership and leasing, but by a variety of devices with which my friend the gentleman from Michigan must be perfectly familiar.

He says that no western ore has been sold along the Atlantic seaboard for years. That is true, and the reason for it is not so much in the control by ownership and leasing on the part of the corporation as in the indirect control by various devices of transportation across the Lakes. Why, there are upon the Lakes to-day men who would be anxious to carry in their vessels this ore at prices which would make it possible for it to be laid down in the eastern Pennsylvania market at such price that they would not have to bring in Cuban ore.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman riold?

Mr. PALMER. But, Mr. Chairman, the steel corporation will not permit that kind of transportation on the Lakes even by these independent transporters.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a statement right there?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PALMER. I do not want to hold up the debate, so I think I will not go on any further.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment providing for a duty on iron ore. I made the assertion, Mr. Chairman, without fear of contradiction, that there are not a dozen Members in this House to-day, outside of the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means, who are in any position to form any intelligent judgment as to whether the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan should be adopted or not.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

This bill is now ostensibly being read for amendment, and what I say concerning the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is true of every item in this bill. This bill was introduced on the 24th day of January. It was reported back on the 25th day of January. It was not until yesterday that Members of this House could secure a copy of this bill, or could secure a copy of the report of the committee. The membership of this House have had no opportunity to examine this bill, to examine the report of the Commissioner of Corporations referred to by the gentleman from Michigan—a report which is as full of information, so far as it goes, as the report of any tariff board can be. And yet you throw that report aside absolutely and deny to this side of the House the opportunity either to offer carefully framed amendments, designed to perfect the bill, or to form any intelligent judgment upon the bill itself.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.
Mr. PALMER. In view of the very full character of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations, I assume that the gentleman will agree with us in the opinion that it is not neces sary to wait for any report of any other board before bringing in this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I do agree with the gentleman so far as the commissioner has reported upon this schedule. I am very frank to make that statement. But we have had that report only three days, and does the gentleman assume that the membership of this House should be compelled to study a voluminous report of that character and form a judgment upon it in three days—upon a schedule involving $18,000,000?

Mr. PALMER. I will make this assertion, that the body which is charged by the Constitution with the duty of preparing this legislation for the use of the House, namely, the Committee on Ways and Means, has had the information that is contained in the report of the commissioner for a very much longer period.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not question that, Mr. Chairman. But, then, the gentleman's conclusion must be this, that so long as the Committee on Ways and Means has information it is not necessary for the membership of the House to have any. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am well aware that the gentlemen on the other side of this aisle to-day do not require information. They are slaves of the caucus, and the caucus is the slave of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means.

But I do say that there are some men, at least upon this side of the House, who believe it is their duty to their constituents and their country to examine bills of this importance upon their merits and vote their convictions upon such bills. Applause on the Republican side.] You are denying to this side of the House that right to-day. I want to read just a few lines from an article in the February number of McClure's Magazine, which pays a very high and well-deserved tribute to the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. Underwood], this article being written by Mr. Burton J. Hendrick. This is what he says:

The most important legislation before the Fifty-fourth Congress was the first Dingley bill. The Rules Committee made a rule which practically provided that the House should accept or reject this legislation as it stood, without amendment. This same rule limited debate on this, the most important legislation proposed in the session, to a single day.

Just what you have done with reference to this bill.

Greatly as Underwood admired Speaker Reed, his soul revolted from this kind of thing—

and he determined, if he should ever acquire any influence in Congress, to do his utmost to abolish the system.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. I suggest to the gentleman that if he will solve the simple question in arithmetic, which is indicated in that statement, he will know that the time given for the discussion of this schedule is just 14 times as much as was given for the discussion of the same schedule in the Dingley bill at that time.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must certainly be aware that I never have defended that old system. There was a time in this House when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] joined with us in doing what we could to abolish that system; but I want to say frankly that I believe that old system, which was open and aboveboard in denying to the membership of this House their rights, was just as good and no worse than the system which you now force upon this House when you pretend to give them a right which in fact is a hollow mockery. [Applause on the Republican side. 1

Mr. Chairman, I have given such time as I could since this bill came into my possession to the study of it. It bristles with question marks from beginning to end, and I would like to have an opportunity to investigate some of those things. For instance, and to illustrate, you place certain machinery upon the free list in this bill; but machinery made by the Shoe Machinery Trust—for instance, the United Shoe Machinery Co., which is under indictment to-day in our Federal courts is given a protection of 25 per cent ad valorem, a reduction, I believe, of only 5 per cent from the nefarious Payne-Aldrich bill. So I might go on. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] referred to ferromanganese yesterday, admitting that it was an article that was necessary in the manufacture of iron, and admitting that the United States Steel Corporation manufactured their own while the independents were compelled to secure their supply from abroad. But, gentlemen, you have raised the duty upon that 230 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill as a whole may be an improvement upon the present law. At this moment I am not certain whether it is or not, and I submit you have not been fair to this House in denying its membership an opportunity to investigate the bill which you have brought before us for considera-tion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the gentleman who has just taken his seat does need time to study this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He needs very much more time than it is possible for this House to give him,

The Payne bill has been upon the statute books for nearly three years, and most of the Members of this House know that the basket clause in the Payne bill carries an ad valorem rate of 45 per cent. The basket clause in this bill is reduced to 25 per cent. The machinery that the gentleman refers to, that he says is controlled by a monopoly, namely, shoe machinery, happens to be in the basket clause of the Payne bill and in the basket clause of this bill.

And it is reduced in this bill, not 5 per cent, as the gentleman says, but is reduced from 45 per cent, the basket clause of the Payne bill, to 25 per cent in this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, if, after having had an opportunity to study the Payne bill for three years, the gentleman has not yet discovered that the basket clause, the most universal clause in the metal schedule, was 45 per cent, I am sure we could not help him by giving him the necessary time in this session of Con-gress to study this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Will the gentleman permit a ques-Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. tion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not wish to be interrupted right now. Now, as to not putting this machinery on the free list. The reason that it was not put on the free list was be-cause it would have been of no avail. It is a patented article: it is a monopoly by reason of the patent rights. It can only be made where the owners of the patent desire it to be made. A tariff will not protect it, because the patent protects it. A reduction of the tariff would not have helped anybody, because the patent protects the owners of the article, so that it would simply have been a matter of absurdity to take that article out of the basket clause where it happens to fall because it is not fixed in the bill and place it on the free list, and then gone to the country and said that we had done something. That would merely be fooling the country, and we did not want to do that.

Now, as I recollect, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LEN-ROOT] voted for the Payne bill. He himself voted to put a tax of 45 per cent ad valorem on these very articles that he criticizes us for reducing the tax on to 25 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, as to the article of iron ore, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is the identical law that is contained in the Payne bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I so stated.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. A tax of 15 cents. The gentleman from Wisconsin was unable, by reason of the fact that we have reported this bill and he has not been able to read the Commissioner of Corporation's report, to determine whether he was right or wrong when he voted for a tax of 15 cents under the Payne bill. There is nothing unusual in reporting this bill. We have given more opportunity for consideration of it, far more opportunity, than has ever been given by gentlemen on that side of the House for the consideration of a tariff bill.

The Payne bill was constructed in secret, introduced in the House one afternoon, called in Ways and Means Committee the next morning, immediately reported, and taken up the next day for debate. We published all of our statistics with this bill a week ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We gave it to the press; it was given out in the newspapers, and there was not a gentleman in this House that could not have got it if he had wanted it.

[Mr. RUCKER of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.1

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I represent on the floor of this House a southern district, and I wish to say now a word to those on the other side of the aisle who come from the South. We have taken from New England more than half of the manufacture of cotton-made goods, and we have transferred the manufacture of it to the South. We are on the eve of taking from Pennsylvania and the North the seat of steel and iron making. This contest in this House and on this bill is a fight between the United States Steel Corporation and Pennsylvania steel corporations as to how cheaply they can get iron ore in order to compete successfully with the iron makers of Birmingham and the iron makers of Tennessee. It developed in the hearing of the Stanley committee, I believe, that the Pennsylvania Railroad owns the Pennsylvania Steel Corporation. At least, there was evidence to that effect.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. They do own it.

Mr. AUSTIN. They do own it. The Maryland Steel Corporation is another importer of foreign iron ore, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, located in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], who drafted this bill, is another. They are the three independent orphans who need to take out of the Treasury of the United States annually not less than $280,000 and put it into their pockets for dividends; and this at the expense of the American taxpayers, and at the expense of the iron makers of Alabama and Tennessee. against it, and I ask the men here from the South to let the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., the Pennsylvania Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the Maryland Steel Co. take care of themselves, and that they guard well the interest of the southern people who send them here. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the thinly disguised charge of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] that this bill, so far as the iron ore paragraph is concerned, is written in the interest of the Bethlehem Steel Co., which happens to be a constituent of mine, perhaps deserves some reply; and I want to make a short statement about that matter now, once and for all, to end the matter and to permanently fix my status in this House, if there is any misunderstanding anywhere about it. I want to say that though it has been the practice in Pennsylvania for the great manufacturing corporations to have their representatives on the floor of this House, I come here as the representative of the people of my district. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So far from being the mouthpiece or the spokesman or the defender of the Bethlehem Steel Co., I want it understood here and now, as my people understand, that I am here in spite of the opposition of the Bethlehem Steel Co., which with all the power of its resources has sought to prevent my being here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I say my being here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I say that with greater pleasure in this presence to-day because within 48 hours I have received my notice from the Bethlehem Steel Co.—though indirectly—that because of this so-called act of treachery to them—so-called treachery to the Bethlehem Steel Co. and to Mr. Schwab—I am marked again for slaughter at their hands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I hope that that will be sufficient for that forever in this House, at least during the short time that I am going to be permitted to remain here.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not controvert, I understand, the statement that I made that this bill, so far as iron ore is concerned, will let in free of duty 25,000,000 tons for which Mr. Schwab has contracted.

Mr. PALMER. I do controvert the statement that Mr. Schwab has contracted for 25,000,000 tons of iron ore. He has made a contract for a shipment of Swedish ore, but nothing like that amount, according to the statements I have seen from him in the newspapers. I want to repeat what I said yesterday, that the Bethlehem Steel Co. is not the only concern interested in this matter of free ore from Cuba. The Bethlehem Steel Co. owns only a small portion of the Cuban ore beds.

Mr. AUSTIN. Name the others. Mr. PALMER. The Spanish-American Iron Co. is not the property of the Bethlehem Steel Co. The only company in Cuba owned by the Bethlehem is the Juragua Co. Southeastern Pennsylvania manufacturers, as my friend the gentleman from Chester County understands, have iron ore in Cuba just exactly as Mr. Schwab has, and there are other manufacturers along the Atlantic seaboard who have iron ore in Cuba along with the Bethlehem Steel Co., so that when we put this iron ore upon the free list we did not do it as any special favor to Mr. Schwab and the Bethlehem Steel Co., but we did it as a simple act of justice in putting all of the small manufacturers on a level with those who have sought to control the ore beds that God has placed upon our American soil. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit a ques-

Mr. PALMER. I will make this one further statement that anybody ought to be able to understand: That nobody can charge us with doing any favor for eastern Pennsylvania steel manufacturers when he reads beyond this clause in the bill, for I know by the language of the telegrams and letters I am getting already that if free ore will do some good for Pennsylvania manufacturers, they think it has been far more than nullified by the reductions which we have put upon pig iron and the other products of iron ore. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DUTIABLE LIST.

1. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel, 8 per cent ad valorem; but nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except secondhand or waste or refuse iron or steel fit only to be remanufactured; ferromanganese, chrome or chomlum metal, ferrochrome or ferrochromium, ferromolybdenum, ferrophosphorus, ferrotitanium, ferrotungsten, ferrovanadium, molybdenum, titanium, tantalum, tungsten or wolfram metal, and ferrosilicon, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "8 per cent ad valorem"; insert, after the word "spiegeleisen," in line 5, the words "$1.50 per ton"; strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "8 per cent ad valorem" and insert in place thereof the words "60 cents per ton"; insert, after the word "ferromanaganese," the words "$1.50 per ton."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to restore the rates of the bill which the Senate and the House sent to the President last August for his signature and which he had the honor of vetoing. The changes that have been made since in this bill, and made presumably with knowledge, show a decrease of 18 per cent in pig iron, an increase of 73 per cent in scrap iron, an increase of 383 per cent in ferro-manganese. It seems to me in view of the fact that after a full and careful deliberation by both the House and the Senate in a bill which met the approval of every Democrat in both bodies and which met the approval of the conference committee be-sides and went to the President of the United States for his signature to become a law, that it is only fair and right that we should now restore those rates to the rates which were passed upon by the Congress at that time. Either you were right, then, gentlemen, or you are wrong now; I do not know which it is. I have taken this bill and I have gone through every item of it from the first paragraph to the last and compared the changes that you have made from the bill which you sent to the President last summer. You have by your action now fully justified the veto which he put upon the measure then. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think now you are going to justify a further veto in the future if I am any judge of the changes that have been made in this bill.

You have increased 43 of these paragraphs above the rates which you had then, and some of them above the rates of the Payne bill itself. Ferromanganese is increased 230 per cent above the Payne bill. Now, concerning the suggestion that I made yesterday, I was wrong when I said the Payne bill in the House carried a rate of $2.50. It was reported to the House from the committee with a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem. It was changed to a specific rate of $4 per ton in the House when it was acted upon there. It was reduced to $2.50 per ton in the Senate after it left the House, and was confirmed by the conference committee. You have now raised it to $5.75, which is 383 per cent higher than you voted to have last summer, and $1.75 a ton higher than in the Payne bill when it passed the House, and $3.25 a ton higher than the bill as it was enacted into law.

Now, then, you have not only changed this, but you have changed 43 other items. Were you right then or are you right now? You were wrong then. Your bill was vetoed. You are worse than wrong now, and the bill ought to be vetoed if it should be passed and sent to the President.

Now, in regard to the first part of this proposition-a change from an 8 per cent ad valorem to $1.50 a ton duty on pig iron. What does that mean? That means this, and I want gentlemen on the other side of the House to bear in mind the fact, that you are presumably voting that 8 per cent ad valorem on pig iron means now the equivalent of $1.27 per ton. I ask you to change that to $1.50 specific. If you do not want to change it to $1.50 specific, change it to $1.27 specific. Because pig iron is lower to-day, the value on which you figure your ad valorem is lower to-day, than it has been in a long, long time, and if you will simply go back to the import rate for the last 12 or 15 years you will find pig iron has been in its import value up to twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four dollars a ton sometimes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have the figures here. You can not show any such figures as that.

Mr. HILL. The figure stated there, showing the full unit of pig iron under the Dingley law as $14, is absolutely misleading. It averaged $17.14.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. I want to say to you that you have only got to raise the value of pig iron to $19 a ton—and the United States Steel Co. can put it there whenever they see fit-and your 8 per cent comes to more than the amendment I have offered there in the way of duty. Does not that protect our Alabama and Tennessee friends? Make it specific if it is for revenue. Make it $1.50 a ton.

The gentleman said here the other day that pig iron could be made in Birmingham, Ala., at $7.50 a ton. Why does he want $1.50, or $1.25, or $2, or $2.50, according to the unit value, under his ad valorem? And that is what you would get; and the higher it gets here in the United States and the more we need it under this system the higher becomes the duty.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Alabama stated or intimated yesterday that they could make iron in Birmingham as cheaply as they could in China?

Mr. HILL. He said $7.50 a ton. It is entirely in the power of the ironmasters of this country to put it to $19, and your duty becomes $1.52. I ask you to make it $1.50, and stop it there. You have it at $1.27. Make it a specific duty if you want it for revenue. If you want it for other purposes, leave it ad valorem, and let the great steel and iron companies of the United States control the prices.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Connecticut says he knows figures, and, as a rule, he does, but I never saw any gentleman in the United States display such ignorance of figures as he has just displayed here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have stated on this floor that the Birmingham district can make pig iron cheaper than it can be made anywhere else in the world. Not all, but some, companies in the Birmingham district to-day can make pig iron at $7.50 a ton, but it costs us in the neighborhood of $5 a ton to get it to the eastern seaboard, and the eastern seaboard is not our market and we are not concerned in it. Our market is in the Mississippi Valley and westward. I stated yesterday that I did not write this bill from the standpoint of the Birmingham which are located in a market that would not be affected if you put iron on the free list. This bill was written from the standpoint of the competitive market in the East, and the Bureau of Corporations says that where you exclude all intermediate profits the cost of making pig iron is $12 a ton there; that where you do not exclude them it is $14 a ton.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut knows, if he knows anything about the situation in reference to this bill, that the enforced price of ordinary pig iron to-day, the price of ordinary pig, at Philadelphia or New York, is $12 a ton, which would make this tax $1.20 instead of $2.50 as in the Payne bill.

The gentleman from Connecticut knows, if he knows anything about this proposition and anything about the reports, that Mr. Pepper's report to the Ways and Means Committee, taken when the gentleman's own side was in the majority, shows that the cost of making pig iron at the Cleveland furnaces, in the Middlesburg district in England, is $9.92 a ton, with a $2 freight rate across the ocean.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield in a moment. If that is not competitive, Mr. Chairman, what would you make it? We do not pretend that this is a protective bill, but we intended it should be a competitive bill. You are paying a freight rate of $2 a ton where you are up against $12 iron on the eastern seaboard, balancing the difference between the cost at home and abroad, if you exclude all intermediate profits.

Now, as to the importations of pig iron, the gentleman has probably been looking at figures where he saw pig iron classed in the same class as ferromanganese and ferrosilicon, as it was carried in the law before the Payne bill was written, because all these high ferroalloys were classed under pig iron at that

Mr. HILL. I want to say to the gentleman that it is reported in the gentleman's own statement here at $16 for pig iron. It is in the gentleman's own statement here; pig iron

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; and if the gentleman had his ears open he would know that he and his colleagues on the committee put back ferromanganese, or consented to have ferromanganese, which is a ferroalloy, dropped back into the pig-iron clause, and he would know that ferromanganese is worth from $28 to $38 a ton, and that it brings up the cost of pig iron to $16-the joker that was put into the Payne bill by the gentleman in control on the other side, for the benefit of a great Steel corporation. But there has not been any pig iron imported into this country with a foreign valuation; real pig, not Scotch charcoal iron, which is not competitive in this country; not ferromanganese, but real competitive pig, which has been over $16 or $17 a ton, even back in 1907, when you had a good market; and to-day it is imported at the price of $12 a ton.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman dispute the fact that it was imported at as high as $24 a ton under the Dingley law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; under the Dingley law, that went back to 1897; but that is not the condition to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the cheapest producers of pig iron in the world are in China, and not in Birmingham, Ala., in my judgment. They pay in the iron mills of China 15 cents a day for labor working 12 hours. They get for $5 in American gold the labor of 30 laboring men in China for

They have the coal, the iron ore, and the fluxing stone in close proximity, as they have in the Alabama fields. They have demonstrated by shipments to New York and the Pacific coast that they can overcome an American tariff duty of $4 per ton and sell their pig iron in New York and on the Pacific coast at a profit. There is one furnace on the Yangtze River with a daily capacity of 300 tons. They are working the cheap Chinese labor at a dollar a week for 12 hours per day, and they are making pig iron in China more cheaply than in any other known mills in the world. Every cut in our pig-iron tariff duty means an increased importation of cheap foreign-made pig-iron from Germany and Great Britain on the east and from China You have cut the present duty more than one-half, on the west. and in doing that you give the European competitor an advantage to ship his foreign pig iron farther into the interior to meet competition from the iron mills of Alabama and Tennessee and the other Southern States. As the gentleman having this bill in charge yesterday said, this means an increase of the foreign purchase of steel and iron articles amounting to $20,000,000. In the last session you reported bills here that meant to transfer to the workshops of Europe woolen goods to the value iron from Cuba to manufacturing it in Tennessee?

of $40,000,000, cotton goods to the amount of $11,000,000, raw wool to the amount of $19,000,000, and in this schedule $20,and in your free list $40,000,000, making a total of $131,000,000 of goods that are now made in American workshops and by American wage earners, which you have attempted to transfer from your own country and place in the workshops of our foreign competitors. When you do this you stand on the floor of this House and on the hustings and say that these bills will not hurt or injure an American workingman. There are 14 schedules. If you can transfer to foreign workshops $131,-000,000 in 5 of your schedules, what will be the total amount of which you rob American mills and American workingmen when you have finished your reductions on all the schedules? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our manufacturers have in good faith invested their money and given employment to our people; have developed our resources and furnished good wages, the best wages in the world, to great armies of deserving workingmen and mechanics. have taken an average of $32,500,000 from each schedule and have given that amount over to the foreign manufacturer and the foreign wage earner. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, when my genial colleague [Mr. AUSTIN] gets up here and makes a plea for the barons who own the iron ore and coal of this country, he becomes very eloquent over the suffering that will come to the laborers who possibly might have to take one-thousandth part of 1 cent a day less provided it worked that way, but I want to ask gentle-men on the other side to be logical. Why do you not ask for a men on the other side to be logical. Why do you not ask for a duty on foreign gold brought into this country? Why do you not put a prohibitive tariff upon gold and silver ores that come to this country? American labor is engaged in mining gold and silver as well as iron and coal. Why do you not say that nothing shall be used in this country for any purpose if it can be produced in this country? Why not increase the wages of the gold miner by putting a prohibitive duty on gold ores? Why not put a prohibitive duty upon foreign capital and prevent it coming to this country, so that the American banks may loan at higher rates of interest? Why do you let the capitalists of this country borrow money in London or Paris or any other foreign city to invest in manufactures in this country when we have banks here that can loan the money to them? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we go into all sorts of absurdities when we say to the people in effect that the more we limit your opportunities to buy the better it is for you. Why, you can raise bananas in Tennessee if you build glass houses over them and put a prohibitive tariff on the foreign grown and then pass a law compelling people to buy them whether they like them or not.

My friends, this old robber protective tariff is beginning to be understood. The people are tired of paying unreasonable prices for what they have to buy in order that somebody who makes an article with no more labor cost than is required to make that article in another country can sell it at a higher price at home than in the competitive markets of the world.

Whenever we collect all the revenue that is needed and necessary in this country by a tariff you have got all the protection that an American ought to have or needs. Any kind of a duty on any kind of a competitive article is protection to the extent of the duty, and we can not get away from it. If we put any duty on an article imported to this country, and the same kind of goods are produced here, it is protection to that extent—inevitable, if unintentional, protection.

I am surprised, especially as to iron ore, that anybody complains of putting iron ore on the free list. Why, if iron ore on the free list helps Mr. Schwab, let it help him. If he can sell in competition with some others cheaper and thus reduces the price of the manufactured product, what harm is there in it?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Is the gentleman aware that Mr. Schwab said that in his judgment he would not sell any cheaper if he got the tariff off?

Mr. SIMS. Well, I suppose he will make all the money he can and in any way he can, but if we put a tariff on iron ore you give Mr. Schwab and everybody else an excuse to say that they must have a compensating duty on the manufactured products, which must come out of the pockets of the consumer. tariff duties come out of the pockets of the consumer. are more consumers than producers in this country of every kind, and it is time that we did something for all the people instead of working all the time for a limited number of the people.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SIMS. Certainly.
Mr. AUSTIN. Would you prefer to get your iron ore and pig

Mr. SIMS. If we get it cheaper than the price charged by the owners of iron ore in Tennessee, all those who consume the products of iron are benefited, and they vastly outnumber the few who sell the iron ore that nature has made, without any of the benefits of Republican protection or help of any kind. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the situation correctly, the pending amendment is the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], who proposes to change this paragraph so as to conform with the rates carried in the so-called Cummins amendment to the cotton bill, which was passed during the special session last summer.

Mr. HILL. And make them specific.

Mr. PALMER. I understand they are proposed to be specific, but they equal the Cummins rates. Now, I want to say a word or two in opposition to that proposition. It seems to me, if that is the purpose of the gentleman from Connecticut, he has put himself into a position of inconsistency, to extricate himself from which will require all of his boasted abilities as the leading strenuous statistician in this House.

Mr. HILL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will try to assist me.

Mr. PALMER. I will try and pull the gentleman out. [Laughter.] Take ferromanganese, which raises the gentle-In 1909 the gentleman man's ire more than anything else. from Connecticut sat in the Committee on Ways and Means, joined in the report to the House, and supported in the House a proposition to make ferromanganese carry a rate of 15 per cent, which is precisely the same rate which we now carry it at in this bill.

Afterwards, when the pressure of the manufacturers of the country became so strong that the House, on the majority side, could not resist it they made the rate on ferromanganese in-stead of 15 per cent, $4 per ton, and finally, in the conference, or in the Senate, it was reduced still further to $2.50 per ton, 15 per cent being larger than $4. Now, if I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut correctly, it is that he now wants to cut out of this bill the rate which he then voted for and to put into this bill the rate that he voted against last summer. That is exactly the gentleman's proposition, and I quote from his speech when I ask him, Are you right now or were you right last summer? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Both times.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman's statement that he is right at both times will hardly go down, because he is on both sides of the proposition. The fact about the gentleman is, as it looks to me, that when he sits in his committee and studies these matters over he recognizes what is a just rate, with the revenue always in mind, and he votes for the 15 per cent, which is the rate carried in this bill, but when he gets into the House where the pressure becomes strong, and he can side-step the responsibility and put it off on a committee of conference, he is willing that the great manufacturers of the country should have the benefit of this decreased rate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, just one word more about this ferromanganese proposition and I am through. The gentleman makes a large matter out of what is really a small one. It is not possible, as any steel manufacturer will tell you, to carry the cost of ferromanganese into the cost of the final article. There is just about 34 cents' worth of manganese in a ton of steel, and it is absurd to say that 15 per cent tax on an article which costs 34 cents in a ton of steel is ever going to be felt at the end of the line. It is a tax on the manufacturer, pure and simple, for revenue purposes, and that fact was shown very plainly by the pressure which the manufacturers brought to bear upon the Republican Congress in 1909, when they succeeded in getting that tax reduced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his last remark is correct. At least, that has been the doctrine often enunciated on this side of the House that increasing the tariff did not mean an increase in the cost of the article to the consumer.

Mr. PALMER. It generally does.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania imagines that he has gotten away from the protective-tariff idea in Pennsylvania, but he still maintains the doctrine as to ferromanganese; and if it be true as to ferromanganese, it is true as to other articles.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] stated a moment ago that the design of this paragraph was to place the articles named in it on a competitive basis, and he has stated heretofore in the House that the tariff now was upon a pig iron, spiegeleisen, and those particular items in the paragraph connected with pig iron, not including the ferrohydrates, was $387,000,000 in 1910. He states in the report that the imported articles for that year amounted to over $2,100,000, and he says that that is not a tariff upon a competitive basis, and he proposes to have a tariff upon a competitive basis. he assumes the amount of importations for a year under this competitive basis and makes it less than it was actually in the year 1910. What competition is there on a competitive basis between a production of nearly $400,000,000 worth in the United States and an importation of only one-half of 1 per cent of that amount? Competitive basis! I am not sure but that it is placed upon a competitive basis, but I am very confident that the estimate made by the committee of importation of only $2,000,000 worth hereafter under a basis proposed by this bill is erroneous, and was known to be erroneous by the gentleman who makes the report or the committee which presents the bill. I believe that if this bill passes and becomes a law in the shape it now is, instead of importations of $2,000,000 worth, it will be an importation of many times $2,000,000 worth; and certainly if a competitive basis is preserved by the bill that will be the case. The gentlemen seem to be exercised only to extend what they call the competitive zone on the Atlantic seaboard. Have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] forgotten that there are other parts of this country beside the Atlantic seaboard? Why should they legislate only to extend the competitive zone a few miles farther from the Atlantic coast? If that be a good thing, why not endeavor to extend it farther, to the great body of the country, the Mississippi Valley. If it is good for the Atlantic coast, it ought to be good for us, although I believe it is bad for all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Just one moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HILL. Five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the gentleman's amendment and on the paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments close in five minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] wants five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say here and now that in the 17 years I have been a Member of the House— Will the gentleman permit, did the Chair put Mr. NORRIS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the gentleman from Alabama was going to change it to 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the gentleman when Mr. HILL gets through; I do not want to cut him off.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in the 17 years I have been in Congress I have never felt that I was justified in attributing to any man a wrong or improper motive for any action which he took upon the floor of this House, and I think altogether too much of that is done throughout the country, and I think that ninety-nine times out of a hundred when it is done it is unjustifiable. [Applause.] I stated a few moments ago I had examined the records in regard to ferromanganese. The Payne committee did originally report 15 per cent; when the bill was considered on the floor of the House it was changed to $4 specific duty, but when it went to the Senate it was changed to $2.50 there. Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] sees fit to assert that it was done in response to the demand of manufacturers and that my vote may have-I judge from his statement-been controlled by such action. In the first place, I want to state there is no iron or steel manufacturing so far as I know—certainly no iron manufacturing and that is what this relates to—and no primary manufacturer of iron or steel either in my district or in the State of necticut. I would not attribute that, and I would not hold such a thing as that, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the only thing that ever gave me a shadow of a thought of wavering from absolute belief was the statement he made himself on the floor of the House a few moments ago, that he had received this morning a notice that the Bethlehem Steel Co. prohibitive basis. In the report of the committee they state that the total value of the production in the United States of rightly with the statement he made a moment before that he had been opposed by them, for if he had been opposed by them and was fighting them I could not understand how he could be accused of treachery to them.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

With great pleasure. Mr. HILL.

Mr. PALMER. I want to say that of course I had no earthly idea in my remarks of casting any reflection upon the honesty of purpose or conduct of the gentleman from Connecticut for whom I have the greatest regard and the highest admiration. I meant to say, and I think I did say, that the pressure which was brought to bear upon Congress to reduce this duty on the part of manufacturers occurred after the gentleman had ceased to be actively connected with it.

Mr. HILL. I have been actively connected with it from that time to this.

Mr. PALMER. I meant to say it was done in conference.

Mr. HILL. It was not done in conference; it was done on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I said in my remarks, in conference or in another body of which the gentleman was not a member.

Mr. HILL. What the gentleman said was that he had been accused of being guilty of treachery, was not it?

Mr. PALMER. I said I had received notice from my dis-

That you had been guilty of treachery?

Mr. PALMER. That the Bethlehem Steel Co. was going after me again, or words to that effect, because of treachery

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, that leaves my mind absolutely in accord with what it was before. That remark was the only reason for my having any question whatever.

Now, in regard to the question of the values of pig iron. The gentleman from Alabama questioned my statement in regard to pig iron being imported into this country at $19, and thus raising the rate of duty materially above what it is now.

I have here the document entitled "Imports and Duties," which was prepared some time ago by the statistician of the Ways and Means Committee, and I find that under the Dingley law pig iron was imported at $22.98, $18.45, $17.15, $16.57, $23.02, $24.22, and then, in 1902, and from there down it has been very much lower. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] explained that by the fact, or what he assumed to be the fact, that spiegeleisen, ferromanganese, and ferrochrome were reported with pig iron, but they are reported here separately and pig iron is reported by itself. So I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I was correct in my statement and his figures only relate to the time from 1902

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I assured the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] I had the report here, showing I had the

Mr. HILL. Surely. He was correct and so was I.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] desires five minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that he may have that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] have five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that the action of the majority of this House could have been forecasted more than a month ago, when the message of the President, accompanied by the report upon the wool schedule, was brought before this House. At that time a most extraordinary scene ensued. Our Democratic friends, seemingly terror stricken, gazed upon the package that held that report as if it contained dynamite or some infernal machine. It contained facts, and the gentlemen did not know what to do with them. They were not accustomed to use them upon this floor or else-

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Not accustomed to get them,

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And also another matter was brought forward which added to the horror of the situation. Some one suggested-and I think it was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer]—in anything but the confident tones in which he has been expressing himself this afternoon, that the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee was not present. A terrible crisis had arisen. They were confronted by the cold, hard facts, and the peerless leader was absent.

Oh, where was Roderick then? One blast upon his bugle horn were worth a thousand men.

As the matter went on, we suggested upon this side that the usual number of copies in this report be printed for the information of this body and for others who might desire them. finally got consent that one copy for each Member might be printed, notwithstanding the fact that it was well known there would be a demand from all parts of the country for this information.

And when the distinguished gentleman from Albandary Underwood arrived did he meet the situation which was pre-And when the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. sented by the tariff report? In the language of the day, walked right in, and turned around, and walked right out He was presented with a report containing the facts in relation to wool, and he and his committee in secret—that is, the majority of the committee-prepared this bill containing the metal schedule which is presented here to-day. And the gentleman says it would have been easy to have gotten full information in relation to this bill. I tried, and others tried, in vain to get a copy of the bill or of the report that accompanies it. I finally succeeded in getting a copy of the bill that was given to the Democratic caucus. I got it day before yesterday, and yesterday I succeeded in obtaining the report of the committee upon it.

They tell us now that we should have looked to the newspapers for our information. Since when, Mr. Chairman, has it been held that this House should act upon statements contained in the newspapers, and upon that information frame a bill to be presented to the American people? Not until to-day, I think. I have had no information, no one upon our side has had information, upon which he could act intelligently in relation to the bill, and for that reason I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. WARBURTON. I desire to offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out in lines 6 and 7, in paragraph 1, the words "8 per cent ad valorem" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall be admitted free of duty."

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, in making this motion I do it as a Republican.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, all debate on this paragraph has been closed, but if the gentleman from Washington desires five minutes, I will ask unanimous consent that he may have five minutes in which to explain his amendment.

Mr. WARBURTON. Yes; I desire five minutes. Mr. UNDERWOOD. All debate on this paragraph has been I asked unanimous consent to close the debate on the paragraph and pending amendments, but—
The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary clerk informs the Chair that the proposition put to the Chair is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I asked unanimous consent that debate be closed on the paragraph and amendments. The gentleman has the right to offer an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that he may have five minutes to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Warburton] may have five minutes in which to explain his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that it is necessary for the protection of the producers of pig iron that we maintain a tariff upon imports. The United States can produce pig iron as cheaply as any country in the world. I do not understand that this is denied by the majority party. If we compare the price of pig iron, as given by the Department of Commerce and Labor with a like study of prices in England, we will observe that the cost of production here is quite as cheap as in England. England is the largest exporter of pig iron, and next to the United States manufactures it as cheaply as any other country. No unnecessary tariff should be placed on pig iron. We have no competitor in the production of pig iron nearer than Europe. The transportation charge on pig iron from Liverpool to New York is $2.75 a ton, so if we can produce pig iron as cheaply in this country as can be done in England the transportation charge on it is quite sufficient protection for all purposes; it insures a profit over and above the profit that the English manufacturer can make of $2.75 a ton.

During the last five years ending with the calendar year of 1910 we exported to Canada on an average $965,000 worth of pig iron; England exported to Canada $1,061,000 worth on an average during the same period. The freight rate from our blast furnaces into Canada quite equal the freight rate from We paid on our pig iron exported to Canada England to Canada. $1 a ton more of tariff than England did, and it will be observed that we exported about the same amount. Now, it is very clear that if we can export as much pig iron to Canada as England does, and pay a dollar a ton duty more than England, we have nothing to fear from England exporting her pig iron to the United States. In order for England to export any of her pig iron into any of our seaports she would be compelled to pay the same freight rate to our American port that she pays to Canada. We would have no freight charge or transportation In other words, England, in order to export her pig iron to the United States, would be compelled to sell it for a sum equal to the difference between the tariff we pay in Canada plus the freight we pay from the place of manufacture into Canada, or we would have an advantage over England in our own markets, as distinguished from the Canadian markets, of $1 a ton in tariff and the cost of transporting our pig iron from the place of manufacture to Canada—$2.50 per ton—or England would be compelled to sell her pig iron in our seaports $3.50 a ton less than she sells it in Canada in competition with us.

The difference between our selling pig iron in Carada and selling pig iron in our own scaports and in our own markets is easily $3.50 a ton, or almost 30 per cent of the cost price. This would give our manufacture of pig iron a profit of 30 per cent on the sale of our goods in America over that which we sell in Canada. The Payne law reduced the tariff on pig iron from $5 a ton to $2.50 a ton. This has not resulted in any increased importation of pig iron. We imported on an average for the five years preceding the fiscal year of 1910, 242,000 tons of pig iron. Our importers of pig iron in 1909 and for 6 to 12 months prior to the Payne law going into effect, which was in 1909, knew that the rate would be reduced $2.50 a ton when the Payne law became effective, so they withheld as much as possible the imports until after that time. This made the importations light for the fiscal year 1909 and much heavier for 1910 than they otherwise would have been and much heavier than a normal importation under the Payne law would be. Notwithstanding this, our importations of pig iron for the fiscal year 1910 were 237,594 tons, or 5,000 tons less than the average for the preceding five years. Our importations for 1911 were 206,194 tons, or 34,000 tons less than the last five years that the Dingley law was in effect. So the gentleman from Illinois was wholly in error when he undertook to show that our importations of pig iron increased under the Payne law. It will be observed that our importation of pig iron, amounting to a little over 200,000 tons per annum, is only about 1 pound out of every 135 we consume. The importations of pig iron came in as readily under a tariff of $5 a ton as they do under a tariff of $2.50 a ton, and this importation would come in whether we have a tariff or not. If we would remove the duty on pig iron we would not import a larger quantity of it than we do now, for the simple reason that no European country can manufacture cheaper than we do, and they can not pay the freight of $2.75 a ton across the water and sell it in our market in competition with us. The advantage of removing the tariff on pig iron is to prevent our manufacturers of it from fixing the price as high on pig iron as the tariff will permit. The average selling price of pig iron from 1891 to 1898, eight years prior to the formation of any steel or iron trust, was $13.78 a

The average selling price since the United States Steel Corporation was organized in 1901 for eight years was $19.25 a ton, or a difference in the average price of $6 a ton. This increased price is largely due to the fact that the United States Steel Corporation, together with the independent concerns, can fix the price of pig iron. They can establish this price from month to month quite as easily as they can the price of steel rails. So if we leave an unnecessary tariff of $1.50 a ton on pig iron we enable the steel corporation to charge this $1.50 than they otherwise could if we could import pig iron free of duty; or we enable the United States Steel Corporation and the independent concerns to charge the American people $1.50 a ton on 27,000,000 tons of pig iron which we will annually produce. We enable them to overcharge the people of the United States $40,000,000 annually. The majority call this a tariff for revenue only. Under this proposed law we would get $1.50 a ton in revenue, say on 240,000 tons that we import, or an annual revenue of $360,000, but in doing so we would permit these great steel corporations to tax the American people this sum of $40,000,000 in profit. If this is a fair sample of tariff for revenue, the sooner we dispose of it the better off the country will be. I do not believe that our manufacturers of pig iron need any tariff to protect them. The freight from foreign iron-producing countries in Europe, our only competitors, to our seaports is $2.75 a ton, or 15 per cent of the cost price of this class of merchandise. If we can manufacture it as cheaply here as it can be manufactured abroad, the 15 per cent freight charge is certainly all the protection that this industry needs. The steel corporation and the independent corporations can arbitrarily fix a price on this product quite as easily as they can upon steel rails; and if we put an unnecessary tariff upon imports we simply enable them to add this tariff, or any portion they see fit, to an otherwise reasonable profit. It is claimed by some that the steel corporation and the independents do not fix the price of pig iron. Be that as it may, an unnecessary high tariff does permit them and invite them to do it. We had no large combinations in the steel industry or in the manufacture of agricultural implements, nor in scarcely any other line of manufacturing, prior to the enactment of the Dingley law, but we had enormous ones before the Dingley law was repealed, and it is wholly unwise from an economic point of view to place a tariff high enough to encourage this sort of thing.

Mr. Chairman, I think I can show that we do not need a penny of protection on iron and steel nor on 90 per cent of our manufactures of which iron and steel are the components of chief value. I firmly believe in the doctrine of protection. firmly believe that we should protect every industry that is economically worth maintaining wherever and whenever that industry can not produce the manufactured article here as cheaply as it can be produced abroad, but we should not have a penny of protection above the amount that will equal the difference between the cost of producing such article here and abroad. I do not believe in a so-called doctrine of a tariff for revenue. I think it is a sham and a fraud. Under its cloak every evil may be sheltered that is sheltered by a high protective tariff. Just as high a tariff, just as unconscionable a tariff, can be levied in the guise of a tariff for revenue as can be under the doctrine of high protection.

I am utterly opposed to any tariff on any necessity of life, on any article manufactured that is a necessity in business or trade, that we can produce here as cheaply as it can be produced abroad. I am opposed to a tariff on any food product that we can not produce here economically and to which our soil, our climate, and our country are not adapted. We can raise every dollar of revenue that the Government needs from a tariff and an internal-revenue tax on luxuries and semiluxuries. If this is true, there should be no tariff levied on any manufactured article that we can produce here as cheaply as abroad and which is used in our trade, commerce, on the farm, in the building of our cities and the construction of our railroads, and in our public improvements.

I want to show-and I think I can show-that the freight charge or transportation tariff is all the protection that our iron and steel industries need. The ratio that the transportation charge or tariff on heavy products, like steel and iron, bears to the selling price of the same is very large and a most important one to bear in mind when preparing a tariff, and one which seems to have been entirely overlooked in the tariff heretofore.

WE DO NOT NEED A PENNY OF PROTECTION ON ANY IRON AND STEEL PRO-DUCTION THAT IS MANUFACTURED OR MARKETED 125 MILES INLAND FROM ANY SEAFORT IN THE UNITED STATES.

No one claims or contends that our present tariff on iron and steel is not sufficiently high to protect the industry in our seaports. No one would think of increasing the tariff to protect our trade in those places. I want to show that if our present tariff is sufficient to protect our iron and steel trade in our seaports, then we do not need any protection at all for our steel and iron trade and manufactures in that part of our country far enough inland so that the transportation charge or tariff are equal to our present tariff on iron and steel. This is self-evident and needs no argument or statement or fact to sup-This is selfport it. If our tariff was removed and our European competitors were to attempt to sell their products west of the Allegheny Mountains, they would at once ascertain that the freight charge for transportation on iron and steel from Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, or Savannah to points west of the Allegheny Mountains was quite as heavy on all our iron less than our present tariff. The rate from Savannah to Birmingham on carload lots is $5.40 a ton, or more than twice our present tariff. The rate from New York and Philadelphia to Buffalo is $2.60 a ton, or 10 cents a ton above our present tariff. The charge for steel rails and structural steel is higher. This list might be extended indefinitely. It is sufficient to say that on the average the freight rate on pig iron and like products 150 to 200 miles inland from our seaports is practically equal to our present tariff. Then it must follow that if our present tariff is sufficient protection for the trade in our seaports our freight tariff or charge is ample protection for all territory farther removed from our seaports than the distance mentioned. Then under no circumstances do we need any protective tariff on steel and iron west of the Allegheny Mountains or east of the Rocky Mountains. But there is still a further item to be taken into consideration, which will show that the foreigner without any tariff could not sell his products inland over one-half the distance mentioned. Our larger centers for the manufacture of steel and iron are just west of the Allegheny Mountains, although we also have very large ones east

If it is admitted, as it must be, that the freight rates from Savannah to Birmingham and from New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia to Pittsburgh are equal to our present tariff, then those great plants could ship their products as far east toward the seaports as the foreigner could ship his west from the sea-It then follows that the foreign shipper could then only sell his product a distance inland equal to one-half the distance between the seaports and the great iron districts mentioned. To put it in miles, the foreign competitor could not get farther inland than 125 miles from the seaports if our tariff was wholly removed. This argument is based on the theory that our present tariff is sufficiently large enough to prevent competition in our seaports.

I will now undertake to show that we need no tariff in the zone mentioned, and that if our tariff was wholly removed we would still be able to dominate the markets in our seaports, although possibly the steel producer would have to lessen his profits at those points.

OUR EXPERIENCE IN THE MARKETING OF OUR IRON AND STEEL PRODUCTS IN MEXICO AND THE PAN AMERICAN STATES IN COMPETITION WITH GREAT RRITAIN, GERMANY, BELGIUM, AND HOLLAND SHOWS THAT WE CAN DOMINATE THAT TRADE IN THOSE COUNTRIES WITHOUT ANY TARIFF IN OUR FAVOR AND WHERE WE HAVE TO PAY TRANSPORTATION CHARGES FROM OUR SEAPORTS TO THOSE COUNTRIES.

I believe there is little doubt in the mind of any man who has made an investigation of the cost of producing iron and steel and the manufactures thereof, and especially the crude and semifinished manufactured products of iron and steel, but that we can manufacture them as cheaply in this country as it can be done elsewhere. Experts who have given much time and attention to the question have reached this conclusion. Mr. Gary, who testified recently, stated that he believed the Steel Trust could compete with the foreigner, although he expressed some doubt as to whether the independent manufactur-ers of iron and steel could do so. Mr. Carnegie, who has had more to do with the establishment of the iron and steel industries in this country than any other one man, has testified that we can manufacture iron and steel as cheaply here as it can be done abroad. If we compare the figures on the cost of products of pig iron, as given a few days ago by the Department of Commerce and Labor, with the figures of experts on the cost of producing pig iron abroad, we must at once see that we can manufacture it here as cheaply as abroad; but what is more conclusive to me than trade reports, more conclusive than the comparison of cost figures here and abroad by experts, more conclusive than the testimony of the great ironmaster, are the trade statistics showing what, in truth and in fact, our manufacturers have been able to do in competition with the foreign manufacturers where our manufacturers enjoyed no protective tariff and stood on an equality as to freight rates.

It is wholly unnecessary to speculate about what we are able to do when we have before us years of trade experience and data showing conclusively what we can do. The old adage, "That the proof of the pudding is in the eating," applies with To what purpose is it to theorize and speculate equal force here. as to what we will be able to do when we have manifold illustrations of what we can do and what we will be able to continue to do? If we can sell our iron and steel products to countries immediately north and south of us, where we have no protective tariff in our favor and where we have the additional charge of freight transportation, have we anything to fear from the same foreign manufacturers dealing in like goods in our own sea-ports? An investigation of this question will show whether or not, in fact, we are able to manufacture and sell our goods as cheaply as the foreigner can do. Mexico and the Central American States are as far removed from our manufacturing centers of iron and steel, as a matter of freight charge, as are the like manufacturers of England, Germany, Belgium, and Holland. To every part of Mexico, to every one of the Pan-American States the transportation is higher, if anything, from our American seaports than it is from the seaports of the other countries mentioned. It costs our manufacturers of iron and steel at least $3 a ton to reach the seaports of Mexico and the Central American States. So we are at a disadvantage of $3 a ton in selling our iron and steel in competition with European countries in Mexico and the Pan American States over what we would be if we were to sell them in our own seaports from which they were shipped, and it is as clear as day that if we can practically monopolize the trade in Mexico and the Pan American States with no tariff in our favor and with $3 a ton transportation charge against us, as compared with selling the goods in our own seaports, we have nothing at all to fear from competition in our own ports. If European countries can not under these conditions drive us from the seaports of Mexico and the Central American States, they certainly can not compete with us in our own ports which are within the shadow of the smoke of our great iron and steel industries. I have no complete data as to relative exports to the Pan American States so I will only give the statistics on the exports to Mexico from the leading iron and steel-producing countries of Europe and from the United States. However, these figures are illustrative of the like trade in the Pan American States. However, these figures are fairly

During the fiscal year 1910, as given me by the Bureau of Statistics, we exported to Mexico of iron and steel, including agricultural implements and cars and carriages, which include automobiles, $18,130,000 worth, England $3,722,000 worth, Germany $2,423,000 worth, and Belgium a little less than $250,000 worth; or we exported about five times as much as Great Britain, almost eight times as much as Germany, and over sixty times as much as Belgium. If we could have sold our iron and steel in the ports of Mexico without paying the transportation charge, as we could sell them in our own seaports from which they are shipped, it is safe to say that the three countries mentioned above would have been unable to have exported but a fraction of the amount that the statistics show. Three dollars a ton on the crude and semifinished product of iron and steel in the favor of any one country will exclude any other competitor. If we give Germany an advantage of $3 a ton on this class of goods and the same freight as England to any country, Germany will sell the goods and England will export no goods, except in negligible quantities. If we give England a preference over Germany of $3 a ton in any country, each having the same freight charge, Germany will be able to sell no goods in that country.

TRADE STATISTICS OF CANADA SHOW THAT WE CAN UNDERSELL GREAT BRITAIN IN THAT MARKET, ALTHOUGH GREAT BRITAIN HAS THE PREFERENTIAL TARIFF EQUAL TO FULLY 10 PER CENT AD VALOREM ON MOST IGON AND STEEL PRODUCTS. WE PRACTICALLY EXCLUDE THE OTHER IGON COUNTRIES FROM THE CANADIAN MARKET.

It may be said that our control of the Mexican iron and steel market is an exceptional case, and other reasons may be ascribed than our ability to undersell the European countries. Such a claim is without any foundation, in fact. We get the business wholly for the reason that we can pay the freight to Mexico and sell the steel and iron cheaper than European countries can who are on an absolute equality with us in tariff rates. No one who is unbiased and who wants to arrive at the truth has reached any other conclusion than the one I have reached. But let us take up the trade statistics of another and closer country, where the trade is immensely larger and which will show beyond cavil that we are correct in our contention.

Canada lies just to the north of us. She is connected with us closely by interlacing railway systems. Very little of the trade between us moves except as carried by the railways of the two countries, only a small fraction being carried to her borders by water transportation. All of England's goods are carried to her seaports by the cheaper transportation. The iron and steel producing countries of Europe can reach her seaports and her large centers of population by ocean boats, and quite as cheaply as can those same countries reach our own seaports. Great ocean transportation lines connect her seaports directly with the seaports of England and other iron and steel producing countries of Europe. England's great iron and steel industries are located at her seaports, which gives her an advantage over Germany and other European States in the foreign iron and steel trade. Canada gives Great Britain a preferential in her tariff of 35.7 per cent, so Great Britain manufacturers of iron and steel pay only 64 cents tariff where our like manufacturers are required to pay $1. Then, too, Canada is a part, and a loyal part, of the great British Empire. English capital has built and largely owns her great railroads; English capital has largely financed all of her great enterprises; in fact, English money has largely taken up and developed her great country. England has subsidized a line of fast steamers between the two countries-the fast mail line extending from Liverpool to Canada, across Canada to Vancouver, and thence to Australia. This is one of the lines to which England gives her largest subsidies in the way of mail contracts. Under these conditions, these advantages accruing to the manufacturers of Great Britain and resting on the American manufacturers, it would seem that our iron and steel manufacturers would be excluded from the Canadian markets. These conditions do practically exclude all other iron and steel producing countries; they certainly would exclude us if we could not manufacture our iron and steel more cheaply than can the like manufacturer of iron and steel in Great Britain. If America can dominate the iron and steel market in Canada under these adverse conditions, has she anything to fear from Great Britain as to her own markets? If we can successfully dominate the Canadian iron and steel market as against Germany, Belgium, Holland, France-yes, all other countries of Europe, who are on an equality as to tariff rates and transportation rates-what have we to fear from them in our own markets, in our own seaports, much less our inland markets?

I might add here, on pig iron we pay a tariff of $2.50 per ton, England $1.50; on steel billets, ingots, slabs, and so forth, we pay $2.50 tariff, England $1.50; on rolled iron and steel angles, beams, girders, and so forth, we pay $7 a ton, England $4.25; on bar iron and steel we pay $7 a ton, England $4.25; on rolled iron and steel sheets, sheared or unsheared skelp iron, we pay $7 a ton, England $4.25; on iron and steel rails we pay $7 a ton, England $4.50; on almost all other dutiable iron and steel products the variation is from 22½ per cent to 35 per cent ad valorem, or from 20 to 30 per cent ad valorem. The ad valorem preference given on other iron and steel dutiable articles will easily exceed 10 per cent.

In the calendar year 1910, as appears from the Canadian Yearbook, Canada imported in iron and steel and the manufactures thereof $61,183,000, of which Great Britain sold $11,-212,000; Germany, Holland, Belgium, and all other countries, except the United States, $1,930,000; and the United States $48,040,000; or we sold in the open market of Canada under the adverse conditions mentioned, 41 times as much of iron and steel and the manufactures thereof as Great Britain did and over 24 times as much as Germany, Belgium, Holland, France, and the balance of the world. We exported to Canada of this class of goods almost four-fifths of all she imported. Not only have we dominated this market during the year 1910, but we have done so for many years, and year by year we obtain an increased precentage of it. In the calendar year 1906, acording to the Canadian Yearbook, we exported to Canada $34,529,000 worth of such goods. The same year Great Britain exported to Canada $8,391,000 worth. In the five years subsequent to 1906 our exports to Canada increased $13,510,000, and Great Britain increased her exports only $2,820,000 worth. It will be noticed that during these five years our increased exports exceed the total exports of Great Britain for the year 1910 by $2,250,000.

I want to ask, in all fairness, does any Member of this body, in the light of these uncontrovertible facts, knowing that we can sell our iron and steel and the manufactures thereof in the open market of Canada, under all the adverse circumstances I have mentioned, and in competition with England and the whole iron and steel producing world, and at the same time honestly and sincerely believe we have anything to fear from England or any other country exporting like goods to our own seaports, whether we maintain our tariff or not? Is it not wholly absurd to express a fear as to our own market in the face of these facts? Germany, Belgium, Holland, France, and Sweden, all the rest of Europe, compete with us for this large Canadian trade on an equality as to tariff and with a transportation less, if anything, than ours, and yet are able to export to Canada only $1 worth of iron and steel to our $24 worth. We beat them only a little over 2,400 per cent. The Canadian Yearbook, from which I gathered these statistics, does not show what these other countries exported into Canada, but I venture to say that they were largely of cutlery and certain kinds of galvanized iron, or rolled iron or steel sheets of a certain width, of which we export none, or some kind of manufactured iron or steel, which especially satisfies the trade market of Canada and which we are not prepared to fill—just as England imports iron and steel from Germany, Holland, and Sweden, and just as those countries each in turn import specialized iron and steel from England and each other. That kind of trade always prevails, no matter what the tariff may be. These are great trade facts as contradistinguished from theory.

It has been said frequently, especially by those who want to maintain a wholly unnecessary high tariff on iron and steel and many of the manufactured articles thereof, that our oxports to Canada consist largely of agricultural implements. This statement goes as wisdom and is undisputed as to fact. However, such a statement is not true and has but a small and misleading fraction of truth in it. Out of the $48,000,000 worth of iron and steel and the manufactures of them that we exported to Canada in 1910 only $3,230,000 worth were agricultural implements—about $1 worth out of $16 of our total exports to that country. We dominated the market on nearly every iron and steel product, no matter what its form. Great Britain exported to Canada in 1910 iron and steel billets, weighing not less than 60 pounds per lineal yard, $61,000 while we exported $380,000 worth. Great Britain exported bar iron and steel, and so forth, to the amount of $385,000 worth; we exported $1,530,000 worth. Great Britain exported iron and steel angles, and so forth, to the amount of $145,000 worth, while we exported $950,000 worth; Great Britain exported skelp iron and steel, sheared or rolled into grooves, $11,000 worth, while we exported $1,535,000 worth; Great Britain exported wire rods, not over three-eighths of an inch in diameter, to the amount of $96,000 worth, while we exported $662,000 worth; Great Britain exported of boiler plate, not less than 30 inches in width nor less than one-fourth of an inch thick, $30,000 worth, while we exported $404,000 worth; England exported steel wire to the amount of $291,000 worth, while we exported $1,130,000 worth; England exported of steel rails $291,000 worth, while we exported $1,103,000 worth. On crude or semifinished manufactured steel and iron, as above mentioned, of which England exported $1,378,000 worth to our $6,573,000 worth, we paid a duty of $2.75 a ton more than England did. We also exported $1,103,000 worth of steel rails to England's $291,000 worth, on which we paid a duty of $2.50 a ton more than England did. Our transportation charge on this manufactured product from the place of manufacture into Canada was quite as large as that of the English manufacturer.

In order for England to export like manufactured steel and iron products into our seaports she would have to pay the same transportation charge as she pays to Canada, if not a little more, while we would be relieved of the average transportation charge to Canada of at least $2.50 a ton. We would also be relieved of the differential in tariff that we pay in Canada of $2.75 a ton on most of the products and $2.50 a ton on steel rails. In order for Great Britain to compete with us in our own country, in our own seaports, she would be compelled to sell this class of merchandise in our seaports for at least $5.25 a ton less than she is willing to sell it in Canada. Our manufacturers have an advantage of selling in our own seaports over Great Britain of over $5.25 a ton on these products, the cost price of which is from $18 to $22 a ton. But the competition in Canada between Great Britain and ourselves is sharp and strong. In order to get the small fraction of trade that England now gets she makes as low a price as is possible for her to sell at a profit. Does anyone imagine that England can export this class of merchandise into our country and sell it for $5 and more a ton less than she is able to sell it in Canada? Five dollars a ton is over 20 per cent of the cost price of this class of iron and steel manufacture. Great Britain makes nothing like $5 a ton, nor half of it, on this class of goods that she sells in England. In order for her to compete in our sea-ports on this like trade she would have to sell her goods at less than cost, and we could meet that and still have 20 per cent profit on our goods.

WE NEED NO PROTECTIVE TARIFF ON THE STEEL PAILS.

Upon what theory we are justified in fixing a duty on steel rails has not been explained-can not be explained. It can serve no other purpose than to enable the Steel Trust to maintain the price of steel rails at $28 a ton. It will enable the Steel Trust to do this. The manufacturers of steel rails will be the sole beneficiaries of the proposed tariff on steel rails. There can be but little doubt in the mind of anyone who will examine the question but that we can make steel rails as cheaply here as they can be anywhere. No country that manufactures steel rails can ship them to our markets at less than the transportation charge of about $2.75 a ton. This is a larger protection than the steel-rail industry needs.

According to a statement given me by the Bureau of Statistics, we exported last year to Mexico steel rails to the value of $1,916,000; England exported $31,000; Germany, $157,000; Belgium, $31,000: Holland exported none at all; or we exported to Mexico $1,916,000 worth as opposed to the combined exports of Germany, Great Britain, Belgium, and Holland amounting to $219,000. We exported steel rails to the West Indies and to the Pan American States to the value of $1,751,000; Germany exported them to the value of $16,000; Great Britain, Belgium, and Holland exported none. We exported to Labrador and New foundland $118,000 worth of steel rails; Great Britain, Holland, and Belgium exported none; or we exported to Mexico and the Pan American States, Newfoundland, and Labrador $3,785,000 worth of steel rails to the combined exportations of Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, and Holland of $235,000 worth; or we sold in those countries in that one year 17 times as many as all the other countries. We paid a freight rate equal to more than $3 a ton, which we would have saved had we sold the same rails in competition with the same countries in our own seaports; or these foreign countries, in order to have competed with us in our own seaports in the rail market, would have been compelled to sell their rails at $3 a ton less than they did in the markets mentioned. It is idle to say that they could have exported any rails to our own seaports and cut their price $3 a ton.

According to the Canadian Year Book of 1910, we exported to Canada $1,103,000 worth of steel rails against Great Britain's $291,000 worth, and as against all other countries' $3,000 worth. Our freight rate to the Canadian markets was about the same as that of England and other countries, but we are compelled to pay a tariff of $7 a ton as opposed to the English manufacturers of $4.50 a ton. Our manufacturers of steel paid $2.50 a ton on steel rails more than the English manufacturers did. If we had been on an equality as to tariff with Great Britain, I think I am safe in saying that Great Britain would not have sold a larger percentage of steel rails in Canada than she did in the markets of Mexico, the Pan American States, and the West Indies, where we sold $3,785,000 worth as against England's $31,000 worth.

In order for Great Britain to compete with us in the sale of rails in our own seaports, as compared with the competition in Canada, she would be compelled to sell her steel rails for as much less than she did in Canada as our freight rate to Canada is plus $2.50 a ton tariff; or she would have been compelled to sell her steel rails in our own seaports for at least $5 a ton less than she sold them in Canada. No one would undertake to maintain that she could do this. If we compare our exports of steel rails to the world at large with like exports of steel rails from Great Britain, Germany, Holland, and Belgium, we will at once see that we have nothing to fear from any European country exporting steel rails to this country.

In 1910 we exported, all told, of steel ralls $10,546,000 worth as against England's $13,275,000, Germany's $12,924,000, Belgium's $4,209,000, and Holland's about $3,480,000. If we exclude the exports of these countries to other countries in Europe, which they dominate and control against us by reason of freight rates, and exclude the exports to the colonies of each of these countries which they in a large measure and in many cases entirely control, and take into consideration only foreign markets where all countries stand on an equality as to tariff and somewhere near an equality as to freight rates, we exported more dollars' worth of steel rails than any country. We exported in such open markets $10,546,000 worth of steel rails as against Great Britain's exports of about $4,000,000, Germany's exports of about $5,000,000, Belgium's exports of about $2,500,000, and Holland's exports of about $1,300,000.

Again, I ask what reason may we advance for maintaining a tariff on steel rails? We certainly do not need it as a matter of protecting the industry, and it will be a failure from a revenue point of view. We have imported on an average less steel rails since the Payne law went into effect than we did on an average for the five years preceding, although the Payne law reduced the tariff about $4 a ton.

Not only does our trade with Canada, Mexico, the Central American States, and West Indies show conclusively that we have nothing to fear from exports of iron and steel from abroad, but our exports to South America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Oceania alike show it beyond question. In 1910 we exported $179,132,000 worth of iron and steel; of agricultural implements, $28,124,000; of cars and carriages, including automobiles, $20,630,000. This amount was sold in competition with the world and upon the world's market. Not one dollar's worth of this was sold in markets where the freight rate or tariff rates was not against our American manufacturer, and on the bulk of it the rate was quite heavy against us. Of this amount we exported to Europe $58,000,000 worth, to North America we sold $90,000,000 worth, to South America we sold $32,000,000 worth, to Asia we sold $11,000,000 worth, to Oceania we sold $20,000,000 worth, and to Africa we exported $4,000,000 worth. England exported of like iron and steel $300,000,000 worth and Germany $200,000,000 worth; or, the United States is only surpassed by the two countries mentioned.

The amounts given above as exported by England and Germany include the exports of iron and steel products to their own colonies. I have endeavored to ascertain just how-much of their export trade went to their own colonies, but I am informed by the Bureau of Statistics that no table is extant which would show this, and it would take a very large amount of work to ascertain what it would be, but I venture the assertion that if we were to exclude the foreign exports of Germany and England to their own colonies and to the countries that lie adjacent to them in Europe, and which they can control against us by reason of freight rates, it would show that the United States surpassed both Great Britain and Germany in exports to countries outside of their own colonies and Europe.

I have already shown that we surpassed Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, and Holland in the exports of steel rails in countries other than Europe and the colonies of each of those countries. The exports of iron and steel rails from these leading iron and steel producing countries is fairly illustrative of iron and steel trade as a whole. This could easily be shown by a comparison of the export trade of other iron and steel products.

Two hundred and twenty-six million dollars of exports of iron and steel, agricultural implements, and of cars and carriages is an enormous sum. These figures are so large that it is difficult to comprehend them, and we can best do it by comparison with other exports. During the fiscal year 1910 the United States exported of barley, buckwheat, corn, oats, rye, wheat, bread and biscuit, corn meal, oatmeal, rye flour, wheat flour, preparation for table, cattle, fowls, hogs, sheep, all other animal food, including fowls, canned beef, fresh beef, salted or pickled beef, other cured beef, tallow, bacon, hams, canned pork, fresh pork, salted or pickled pork, and lard, $240,723,000. These exports of our farm products exceed our exports in iron and steel, agricultural implements, cars and carriages, only $14,000,000.

A high protective tariff on any article which we produce in quantities sufficient to supply our home market is not a serious thing. A high protective tariff or an unnecessarily high tariff is not a serious thing on any class of goods where a monopoly is impossible or where a comparatively few men can not fix the price. It is a most dangerous thing and one of great evil where a few men or corporations can and do control the output and arbitrarily fix the price, because in all such cases the manufacturer can fix the price just below the point where a like article can be imported. An unnecessarily high tariff affords the opportunity to corporations or individuals who control the output or fix the price to hold it up as high as the tariff will permit, no matter what the cost of production may be or what an enormous profit they may make. There can be no doubt in the mind of any man who is conversant at all with our iron and steel industries that the steel corporations and the independent steel manufacturers do arbitrarily fix the price at which manufactured crude iron and steel sells. If we compare the price of steel rails for eight years prior to 1899, which is prior to the beginning of the consolidation of the great steel plants in 1898, and ending in the spring of 1901 with the organization of the United States Steel Corporation, with the price eight years subsequent to the organization of the Steel Trusts, we will at once see how this great corporation, in connection with the independent companies, has been able to fix the price of steel rails.

In the first eight years mentioned the price of steel rails varied each year and each month of the year. During those years we had real competition, and the average price of each year varied from the highest average price in 1892 of $30 a ton to the low-est average in 1898 of $17.62 a ton. The average price each year of any of the two years mentioned varied from 33 cents a ton to $10 a ton, the average price of each of the eight years being as follows:

	Per ton.
1891	$20, 92
1892	30, 00
1893	28, 12
1894	28.00
1895	24, 33
1896	28.00
1897	18, 75
1898	17.62

Compare these figures for the average price of the last eight vears:

	rer ton.
1902	$28.00
1903	28.00
1904	28, 00
1905	28. 00 28. 00
1907	28. 00
1908	28. 00
1909	28.00
1910	28. 00

Each year of these eight years, and each month of the year, the price of steel rails has been the same to a penny. Some one arbitrarily fixed this price. It is fair to assume it was fixed by the only people who could do so, to wit, the corporation who manufactured it. The price could not have been the same from month to month under ordinary trade conditions. In fact, under ordinary trade conditions it would have varied each month of the whole eight years. In the light of these facts we do not need the testimony of Mr. Carnegie or the Department of Commerce and Labor to the effect that the Steel Trust and the independent corporations together have arbitrarily fixed the price during the last eight years. Somebody did fix the price, and it was done by those most interested in holding it at a high figure.

The average price for steel rails during the first eight years' period mentioned was $24.46 per ton. The steel corporation since its organization has been able to hold the price on an average of $3.54 above that amount. They could not have done this successfully for any length of time but for the fact that the high tariff has enabled them to do so.

The price of other crude steel commodities is likewise fixed from month to month by the Steel Trusts and the independent companies cooperating together. If not, it can be done at any time the manufacturers desire to do so. If we leave a dollar or two dollars or three dollars of unnecessary tariff on steel rails, pig iron, ingots of steel, and so forth, we invite the steel corporation to fix the price of them just that amount more than they would be able to do if we removed the tariff entirely. If we leave a tariff of two or three dollars a ton, we give the steel corporation the opportunity to add that much to the price of these products, and its officers would be little more than human if they did not take advantage of it. The proposed law leaves a tariff on these products on the theory that it is a revenue measure. This is absurd and will prove a great injury to the American people. The Payne law reduced the tariff on steel rails about $4 a ton and on pig iron $2.50 a ton. We have not imported on the average as many tons of steel rails or pig iron since the Payne law became effective as we did on an average during the five years preceding the enactment of the Payne law. If we leave $1.50 on pig iron, as proposed, it will enable the manufacturers of steel to add this $1.50 a ton to the 27,000,000 tons that we annually consume, or it will give the Steel Trust and the manufacturers of pig iron an opportunity to make a profit on the pig iron that we consume of $40,000,000 and on steel rails about $10,000,000. We will not receive in revenue under the proposed law more than $350,000. This ought not to be done; there is no reason for it, and the people of this country are liable to be injured the full amount if we do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks manimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska evidently wants to delay the game. That is evident.

Mr. NORRIS. No, I do not. I want to say to the gentle-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman himself [Mr. WARBUR-TON] does not ask an extension of time. He asked to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman was making a speech which was really illuminating, and I should like to hear him talk at greater length.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the request of the gentleman to extend his remarks in the RECORD will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection that request will be granted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. All iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than plg iron, except castings; muck bars, bar iron, square iron, rolled or hammered, round iron, in coils or rods, bars or shapes of rolled or hammered iron not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of Members to the intimate relation that the cost of construction material bears to industrial depressions. It has recently been established as an indisputable fact that industrial depressions are due to the cessation of investment contracts and construction. I will not detain the committee on that proposition, but will read one or two extracts from a recent work called "Industrial Depres-"by George H. Hull, of New York, in which this fact is established. One paragraph in that book is as follows:

From these facts it would appear that of all the alleged causes gathered by the three commissions appointed by the United States Senate and House of Representatives and those gathered by the Bureau of Labor during the first year of its existence, together with those gathered from all other available sources, there is but one alleged cause which stands the test of all forms of analysis which can be brought to bear upon it. That one, "high prices," stands the test, no matter in what manner it appears or in what particular form of words it may be expressed.

This investigator, following the lines of Adam Smith, has made an industrial discovery that will probably be epochmaking, establishing the fact that it is the high price of construction material and labor or the high price of construction that causes investment construction to cease; that that construction makes about one-third of the total construction, leaving the necessity construction to run all the time, and that it is that one-third, or investment construction, which, entered into, makes a boom, and which, not entered into, makes a depression. Now, investment construction is entered into or is not entered into precisely according as those who hold the funds for investment recognize that the cost is low or high. I will quote one other paragraph to call attention to the importance of the matter, and will then ask unanimous consent to insert other paragraphs in my remarks. That paragraph reads as follows. After making an analysis of all the depressions we have had, and finding that they throw out of employment about one breadwinner out of five, the author says:

An industrial depression which throws out of employment one out of every five of the breadwinners of this country is a great calamity. It is a loss at the rate of over $3,000,000,000 in the annual earnings of the people, an amount nearly equal to the value of all the gold and silver taken out of the Western Continent since it was discovered by Columbus. As the country grows in population and wealth the magnitude of these calamities grows. As labor becomes specialized and as the control of the great industries becomes centralized the helplessness of those who are thrown out of employment becomes greater. What has already grown to be a serious matter may grow to be a dangerous matter.

The facts established in this volume indicate very clearly to

The facts established in this volume indicate very clearly to my mind that the management of the steel industries of America has reached the point where it not only tends to produce industrial depression, but to interfere with those economic forces that bring relief from such depressions. Heretofore in the great periodical depressions that have come the low prices of construction that followed the depressions brought about renewal in investment construction, and the new investments brought about a general revival; but in the present condition of the control of the steel industry in America the high prices of construction material can be maintained and are maintained in spite of industrial depression.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama

has expired

Mr. HOBSON. I ask an additional three minutes, and then permission to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes and to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBSON. When an industry fills up the home market and receives such high profits in that market that it cares but little for the markets of the world, that industry not only ceases to continue in its natural growth, but it turns upon itself and begins to adopt methods under which it can control the prices in the home market.

It makes such enormous profits in the home market that the two-thirds of construction, or necessity construction, that must go on all the time yields large dividends whether there is general depression or not. And they can and do maintain high prices for construction materials even now in a condition of general industrial depression. A recent disregard of the gentleman's agreement to maintain prices has caused a slight fall in prices, which has brought temporary activity, but it is only temporary, and does not relieve us from facing a grave situation when the general growth and prosperity of a whole people and even of the whole world is falling under the control of a few men who dominate the steel and iron industries. We live in the iron and steel age, and iron and steel determine the booms or depressions of all the industrial nations of the earth. Conditions are gathering, and are practically already formed, un-der which the prosperity of the world can be absolutely controlled at will irrespective of the economic forces of supply and demand. Instead of periodical depressions, as in the past, we are facing a condition when, through high prices, a permanent depression can be maintained upon the American people, unless a combination is in the forming between the steel and iron producers and distributors of the world. Such a combination, if completed, could, under existing conditions, control the iron and steel industries of the whole world, and by maintaining high prices could reap large profits themselves upon necessity construction and yet hold all the rest of the world in continual depression. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, stating frankly that I had intended to offer an amendment to each of these paragraphs, reducing it to the rates of the bill passed by the Democratic Party in August last, if I may have the privilege of reading the names of the articles in which the rates have been changed, I will stop the further offering of amendments in that direction.

I find, by taking the figures given in the Democratic caucus print, that the articles that have been increased above the rates which gentlemen on the other side unanimously voted for in August last are:

Chromium metals, ferrosilicon, bar iron, muck bars, square iron, saw plates, hoop bands and scroll iron, sheets of iron or steel polished, sheets and plates pickled, cold-rolled plates and sheets, strips and plates cold hammered, iron and steel wire rods, cold-rolled bars, which takes a large portion of the cruder forms of steel; zinc in sheets, automobiles, automobile parts, bicycles and motor cycles, axles and axle forgings, cast-iron pipe and castings, cast-iron stove plates, and so forth, malleable-iron castings, chains of all kinds, tubes, pipes, and flues, cylindrical tubes, shotguns and pistols, hollow ware and kitchen utensils, steel plates, ingots and cogged ingots, barium and calcium, gold leaf, so that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] can see that they are even raising the duty on gold, which he suggested a moment ago; tinsel wire, bullions, and metal threads, thorium oxide, metallic pens with nibs on, from 5.53 in the Payne bill to 25 per cent in this bill, penholder tips, gold pens, fountain pens, quicksilver, watch cases, chronometers, and so forth, clocks and parts of jewels for watches and clocks.

Now, then, the reason I read that is that the theory upon which the bill is constructed is, as I understand it, that the lower the duty gets, to a certain point, the more revenue you get. I would like to know how, on that theory, you expect to get more revenue by raising the duty, and therefore I read these items and submit them to the calm consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others who prepared the bill. There are 43 instances where they have raised their own rates. Of course they lowered the Payne rates, but these are items where they have raised their own rates of last summer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. A moment ago the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] offered an amendment to put pig iron on the free

In connection with this paragraph in the bill I desire to call to the attention of the committee a few figures concerning importations of iron and steel on the Pacific coast. I understood the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] to say that reducing the duty on pig iron, for instance, would make no difference in the importations, practically. I have made a comparison of the importations of iron and steel on the Pacific coast for the last year of the Dingley law and for one year under the Payne law, though not for the last fiscal year, because the figures I have obtained were before the end of the fiscal year. The importations of pig iron at Port Townsend, which is port of entry for the State of Washington, increased from the last year under the Dingley law from 1,494,000 pounds to 12,402,000 pounds from China. At the same time the increase from the United Kingdom was from 4,000,000 pounds to over 21,000,000 pounds. During the same period at San Francisco the importations of iron and steel and their manufactures increased, from Belgium, from 10,000,000 pounds to 30,000,000 pounds; from Germany, from 7,000,000 pounds to 18,000,000 pounds; from England, from 12,000,000 pounds to 31,000,000; from China, from 2,000,000 pounds to 6,000,000 pounds. During the same period at Portland, Oreg., the increase from Belgium was from three million and a half pounds to over 9,000,000 pounds; from Germany, from nothing to over 3,000,000 pounds; from the United Kingdom, from 2,000,000 pounds to 12,000,000.

The figures that I first gave for Port Townsend were pig iron, and the increase in importations in pig iron at Port Townsend during the same period from British Columbia was from nothing during the last year of the Dingley law to 1,232,000

There was a great reduction in the tariff rate in the Payne law from the Dingley law, and the result is that practically all of the iron and steel used on the Pacific coast, or at least an exceedingly large portion of it, is now imported and the present tariff paid upon it, because it is cheaper to import it than it is to have it made in this country. The importations have so very largely increased from China that, with the decrease proposed by this bill, it is almost certain the importations will be greatly increased.

We have been very kind to the Pacific coast, as far as tariff legislation is concerned. I am not prepared, so far as one Member of Congress is concerned, to say that we will keep a high tariff on everything that the Pacific coast produces and let them obtain everything which they consume from foreign countries at a low rate of tariff. I am not prepared to pay a high price on lemons in order to have them shipped from California across the continent and then say that California and Washington and Oregon shall bring their pig iron from China made by Chinese labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] will recognize the fact that it is hardly fair for an American Congress to exclude the cheap Chinese labor by statute and yet at the same time permit the Chinese people to bring in their pig iron on the Pacific Coast. There is no consistency in it. It is not right, and it is not just to keep from the shores of America the cheap Chinese labor and yet at the same time throw our doors wide open to the steel and pig iron made by the cheap coolie labor in China. Now, there is going to be a reduction in the price of delivery of pig iron on the Pacific coast, and it will come with the completion of the Panama Canal, and the pig iron for the Pacific coast will be furnished by the iron mills of the Southern States by the improved waterways, giving them cheap water transportation down the rivers upon which their furnaces are located into the Gulf of Mexico and through the Panama Canal. We owe it to the American workingmen to keep out the goods made either in China or Japan that are sold in competition with the goods made by the American mechanics. If there is anyone in this House who desires to extend the zone in the future and increase the sale of goods made in Germany, France, China, or Japan, let that responsibility rest entirely with the majority in this House. The Republican Party in this House is united to-day as it never was united since I became a Member, and it is united because the majority have stated that they propose to put through the House legislation absolutely robbed of every bit of the American protective-tariff system, and while there is a limit to discussion and a restriction in perfecting this bill, there will be no limit to the discussion that we will have with our opponents before the American people ere the ides of November come. [Applause on the Republican side.] We will be a unit against extending the zone and increasing the sale of foreign-made goods in America, and we will stand solid, where we have always stood, to give the American manufacturer and the American wage earner the protection that they need from the cheap, pauperized labor of foreign lands. We will make our goods at home in American workshops, giving the highest known scale of wages to the American workman. It is on that issue we challenge you in this coming campaign, and it is the ardent hope of the Republican Party that you will go into the national campaign with the declarations you have made on the tariff in the discussion of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is rather amusing to me, I do not know how it is to others, that whenever a tariff measure is up for consideration by this House that immediately the hearts of Members on that side of the House warm to the American wageworker [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], and yet the policy of the Republican Party for the past 30 years or more has been to protect and take care of the manufacturers, the employers of labor, and then depend upon the generosity of those employers to take care of the wageworker. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The real situation is this, that the American wageworker is placed in the position, by virtue of a high protective and in some instances prohibitive tariff, where everything he needs in his household, in his home, must be purchased in a market where the prices have been embanced by virtue of those high where the prices have been enhanced by virtue of these high tariffs and then sell the only thing he has for sale, his labor power, in a market that has free trade with all the world except China. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So there is no inconsistency on the part of the gentleman from Washington in taking the position that he does. The only part of the world that wageworkers of the Pacific coast are protected against is China. There is practically free trade in labor from all other parts of the world.

You have labor upon the free list and you have the things which laborers have to buy upon the protective list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And then you hope to deceive now and in the future, as you have in the past, the American workingman into the belief that a protective tariff or a prohibitive tariff is for his welfare, when, in fact, it is for the welfare of the manufacturer and the employer of labor as against the rest of the people. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

4. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, and strips of iron or steel, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 20 per cent ad valorem; sheets of iron or steel, common or black, of whatever dimensions, whether plain, corrugated, or crimped, including crucible plate steel and saw plates, cut or sheared to shape or otherwise, or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel, whether sheared or rolled in grooves, or otherwise, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, lines 5 and 6, by striking out the words "20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, this particular paragraph covers plate iron and steel and sheet iron and steel, and it was intended, and the original draft of the bill did place both plate and sheet iron and steel at the rate of 15 per cent ad valorem. This amendment is offered by the committee to correct a clerical error by reason of which the rate of 20 per cent ad valorem crept into the bill without our noticing it until after the caucus had met and acted upon the bill.

I will call to the attention of the gentlemen upon this side of the House that the Democratic caucus held a few days ago, while it adopted this bill as a party measure, passed a resolution that the committee should be permitted to offer such amendments as might be necessary upon the floor of the House to correct errors, omissions, or clerical mistakes. This is only a clerical mistake in this paragraph. If we did not put this amendment in and reduce the rate from 20 per cent to 15 per cent we would be compelled, in order to make our bill systematic and scientific, to put a proviso in this clause defining the difference between plate steel and sheet steel. There is no difference between plate and sheet steel, except as to thickness, and if we carry a different rate upon plate from that which we carry upon sheet, it will be necessary to define the thickness of the plate, which would make it understood to be sheet steel. I thought that this explanation of the committee amendment was due, particularly to this side of the House.

Mr. MANN. Can we have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. Do you put everything in the paragraph at 15 per cent?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

7. Railway bars, made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, T rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, railway fish plates or spliced bars made of iron or steel, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. WARBURTON and Mr. MURDOCK rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr.

WARBURTON] is recognized.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 7. When I prepared my amendment I had before me the House caucus bill, and I see I did not have the amendment quite right. I move to amend section 4, on page 4, by striking out the words "10 per cent ad valorem" and substituting in lieu thereof "shall be admitted free of duty."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that we have long passed paragraph 4.

Mr. WARBURTON. This is section 7.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 2, page 4, by striking out the words "10 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. HILL. My impression is that if you strike out and do

Mr. HILL. My impression is that it you strike out and do not fix any other rate you double the duty.

Mr. WARBURTON. I believe I inserted the words "in lieu thereof." The amendment is this, that you strike out the words "10 per cent ad valorem" and substitute in lieu thereof the words "shall be admitted free of duty."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is the continuous production which the continuous production.

there are no such words in the section which the gentleman proposes to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending. Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. I understood the Chairman ruled the gentleman out of order.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I simply made the point of order that there are no such words in the section as the gentleman moved to strike out, and he has corrected his motion by making it 10 per cent. There is no point of order pending against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wash-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Un-DERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much time does the gentleman from Kansas want?

Mr. MURDOCK. Five minutes. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to give the gentleman 5 minutes out of the 10.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I offer the amendment. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama what his intention is in regard to the bill, whether he expects to pass this bill on Sunday morning?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope to be able to pass the bill tonight. I certainly expect to work several hours longer on it.

Of course I can not tell whether I can pass it, but I hope to be able to do so.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is quite able to tell whether he can pass it. I wish the gentleman would agree that we should run a little while longer and that we might take Mr. MANN. up the bill and finish it on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not agree with the gentleman about that, at any rate not now. I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I expect to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it that way. question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.
Mr. MURDOCK. I offer the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the words "ad valorem," in line 2, page 4, the following: "Provided, That if the United States district courts adjudge the United States Steel Corporation a combination in restraint of trade and exists in violation of the act of July 2, 1890, an act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, then, from and after the date of entry of such decree, railway bars, made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, T-rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, railway fishplates or spliced bars, made of iron or steel, shall be exempt from duty."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, in brief, provides that if the United States district court eventually decides against the United States Steel Corporation in the suit which the Government has filed in New Jersey, the items enumerated in this paragraph shall not pay a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, but shall be admitted free. I introduced the amendad valorem, but shall be admitted free. ment because of this: During my political experience, which covers in this field the last 10 years, I have heard it stated over and over again in political debates, that if there was one item in tariff schedules that was completely under the control of a monopoly it was the item of steel rails. I have had that confirmed over and over again here as a listener to the more or less illuminating debates. Gentlemen will remember that less than two weeks ago on this floor, at the close of a busy day; a spirited debate arose over the price of steel rails. It has been represented by maintained in the public prints and on this floor. repeatedly maintained in the public prints and on this floor, that for the last 10 years steel rails have continually been of the same price, namely, $28 a ton-steel rails, standard rails, and not the smaller sizes. You will remember that during that debate the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]-and I think I can say that there is no man on this floor who has devoted lately as much time to the study of the question as he pointed out, under inquiry, that year after year steel rails have remained at the single price of $28 a ton.

I do not think there is any gentleman who believes, if this circumstance as to the price of rails is a fact, that it is a mere matter of accident. It does argue collusion.

Now, the point I wanted to make is that there seems to have come into the minds of some men in the Democratic Party a doubt that the United States Steel Corporation is a combination in restraint of trade. There is no such doubt in my mind. do not believe there is a doubt in the minds of the majority on

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me finish what I have to say in this direction, and then I will allow the gentleman to interrupt me. The point I want to make is that there is nothing particularly sacred about a Democratic or a Republican caucus. There is no reason at all why you should tie yourselves up to a certain program in a matter of this kind. This is not an extreme, this is not a radical proposal. It offers you this: If you are in doubt that the United States Steel Corporation is a combination in restraint of trade, then wait until the court has decided, and if the court does so decide, that it is a combination in restraint of trade, then this bill, if it become a law, will automatically put steel rails on the free list.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia before he interrupts me that he is the member of a party that less than four years ago solemnly in convention in Denver declared this, and I challenge him as a member of the party to live up to his party declaration. Here is the declaration from the Democratic platform:

We favor the immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction en import duties, that articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products shall be placed on the free list.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia why does not he, with the majority upon that side, in a matter of this kind, choosing between fidelity to the caucus and fidelity to the national paltform, why do they not adopt this amendment? I pause, that the gentleman from Georgia may answer.

Mr. BARTLETT. I rose to ask the gentleman from Kansas this question. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Oh, I will answer any question the gentleman asks me.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wish the gentleman would answer it.
Mr. BARTLETT. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take the duty off from steel rails and every other steel product if controlled by a trust.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why do you not do it, then? Mr. BARTLETT. I say so far as I individually am con-

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to hear the gentleman from Georgia. I esteem him very much and have for many years, and here is a matter I regard a little bit above the political

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

has expired

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like two more minutes, Mr. Chair-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to yield the whole of my time, but I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me say one word to the gentleman from Georgia before he further replies. I want to say on a matter of this kind where there is no general dispute, no politics in it, that we ought for the moment to disregard so slight a thing as a caucus rule and do a plain, simple act, namely, to vote to put steel rails on the free list if the courts should declare that the steel corporation is a trust.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly. Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has singled me out, and it is no offense to me for him to do so, because my views are not concealed about anything, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.
Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman said that there seemed to be in minds of Democrats an impression that the steel corporation was not a trust.

Mr. MURDOCK. Some of the Democrats.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman said on this side,

Mr. BARTLETT. So So far as I am concerned, I am not in a position to make a declaration with reference to that. It would not be a proper thing for me to do, occupying the position I happen to occupy as a member of that investigating committee; but I will say that the one man I know of who has publicly declared that the steel corporation was not a trust is the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. MURDOCK. So far as I am concerned, I will say that think it is a combination in restraint of trade, and I believe the court will so adjudge it, and this amendment, if carried, will do no harm.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the officials of that giant corporation are to-day engaged in endeavoring to resurrect that same gentleman as a presidential candidate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let us take the duty off steel rails if the corporation is adjudged a trust. Will the gentleman agree to

Mr. BARTLETT. I will vote to take the duty off steel rails or any steel product that is controlled by a trust.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not now?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the reason this tax is left on here is that possibly, and I hope it will be so, the con-cingency to which the gentleman points in his amendment may happen. If it does happen, then there is reason for keeping this tax on, more so than there is now. As I understand the situation in reference to steel rails, there is a world-wide agreement between the English and the German manufacturers and the American manufacturers that the German and English manufacturers will not ship rails into this country and that the American manufacturers will not ship them into Europe. balance of the world is an open competitive market between I do not know that dissolving a trust in this country could break that agreement, but it probably could. If the United States Steel Corporation were dissolved and its various rail mills put into separate companies, being competitive, I think probably that agreement would break down

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Then the gentleman declines to yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do. I have only five minutes. If that agreement—I do not say that I know it, but I have reason to believe that it is so—as to a division of territory breaks down, then this rate in this bill will be competitive, and it will be a revenue producer; but if the condition remains as it is we would accomplish nothing for the American people by putting rails on the free list, because none would come in under this agreemnt to which I refer. None of the high-class rails are coming in now. The only revenue that is coming in under this paragraph to-day is coming in from light rails, not due to the tariff, but because the one item in the Payne tariff bill which was reduced very low was the item of steel rails. That did not bring them in. I do not contend with this House that this will bring them in as long as this world-wide agreement stands.

It will not affect the tariff one way or the other. as the American manufacturer agrees not to go into the European market and the European manufacturer agrees not to go into the American market, no tariff conditions will affect this item; but if that agreement breaks, then this particular rate will be a low rate and will be a competitive rate and will create

That is the reason we did not come in here and pretend that we were going to accomplish something by putting these articles on the free list when we would not have accomplished anything, and, in my judgment, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has his amendment backward. If the contingency that his amendment looks to should happen, that will probably break this world-wide agreement, and then you will have a competitive rate, because a 10 per cent tax on steel rails will not be a very high tax if there is a competition between the Old World and this world.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Norris) there were-ayes 19, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

8. All iron or steel sheets, plates, or strips, and all hoop, band, ir scroll iron or steel, when galvanized or coated with zinc, spelter, or other metals, or any alloy of those metals; sheets or plates composed of iron, steel, copper, nickel, or other metal with layers of other metal or metals imposed thereon by forging, hammering, rolling, or welding; sheets of iron or steel, polished, planished, or glanced, by whatever name designated, including such as have been pickled or cleaned by acid, or by any other material or process, or which are cold rolled, smoothed only, not polished, and such as are cold hammered, blued, brightened, tempered, or polished by any process to such perfected surface finish or polished better than the grade of cold rolled, smoothed only; and sheets or plates of iron or steel, or taggers iron or steel, coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals, or either of them, is a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin plates, terne plates, and taggers tin, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 8, page 4, by adding, in line 20, after the words "ad valorem," the following:
"Tin plates coated or plated with nickel or other metal, 30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, the coating or plating of tin plates with nickel or other metal called nickeloid is a separate and distinct industry. The manufacturers of these coated plates are compelled to buy their tin plates in the market, so that the tariff on tin plate does them no good. They can be protected only by the difference in the tariff between the tariff on tin plates as such and a higher tariff on tin plates coated or plated with nickel or other material, making an article called nickeloid. It is a considerable industry, and it is unable to compete successfully with foreign manufacturers unless it has some protection. This amendment proposes 30 per cent ad valorem on the coated or plated tin plates, whereas the tariff as proposed in the bill is 20 per cent ad valorem on the tin plates not coated, which would make a protection of 10 per cent on the coated tin plates. This industry should have some degree of protection. Under this bill, unamended, it would have none whatever.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FULLER. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. The raw material of the nickeloid manufacturers is tin plate and nickel, is that right?

Mr. FULLER. I think so, perhaps some other metals, but I do not know; but they have no protection on the coated plate.

Mr. PALMER. But the raw material has been very considerably reduced in this bill. Is not that true?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know how much, but that cuts very little figure with them whether or not there is a tariff on the raw material. They can only be protected by a tariff on the coated plates over that on ordinary tin plates.

Mr. PALMER. I think the gentleman is very much mistaken about that. The materials enter very largely in the final cost of nickeloid. The labor involved is not considerable, and the cut which has been made here on tin plate down to 20 per cent will leave the nickeloid people about where they stood, so far as their finished product is concerned.

Mr. FULLER. But I understand there is no protection on the coated plate.

Mr. PALMER. Well, there is not much protection anywhere in the bill.

Mr. FULLER. So it seems to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FULLER) there were-ayes 41, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

18. Automobiles, bicycles, and motor cycles, and finished parts of any of the foregoing, not including tires, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, we have reached the end of the list of cruder products of iron and steel and I desire to call the attention of the committee, and I hope to some degree of the country, to the fact that the report submitted by the committee on this bill practically makes no reference to the remainder of this schedule, and that the parts to which the report is devoted constitute only about one-third of the schedule. I have taken the census table embodied in the minority report and have segregated from it the cruder forms of iron and steel, the products of the rolling mills and the blast furnaces of the country, and I find that practically two and a half of the entire three and a half billions—and if the increase since 1905 is considered, twothirds of the five billions of products covered by the schedule now-consist of finished products of the products of iron and steel and other metals, and that these have practically received no consideration by the committee, except that they have taken an ax or a "blacksmith's tool" of some kind and cut the rates in two. In one respect, I do not know that I greatly regret this. This action of the Democratic majority will make the great Middle West of this country, and certainly all of New England, solidly Republican in the next election. [Applause on the Republican side.] Make no mistake about that. We are slowly losing some of these industries in New England; they are going to the Middle West, nearer to the source of their supply of raw materials. You are not hitting us so much in doing it as you are hitting the people between the Mississippi River and the Alleghenies, but you are hitting them and hitting them very, very hard.

Many of these industries are employing simply labor in addition to the raw material which you produce. A penny's worth of wire being made into a dollar's worth of finished product by labor alone is being cut in two, and a 25 to 50 per cent reduction made on those things, with a reduction of only 5, 10, and 15 per cent on the raw material. Now, if you can stand it politically, try it on. You did try it on in 1894, and you turned the district which I now represent from 2,300 Democratic to 5,400 Republicant. You targed the State of Connection for 5,400 Republican. You turned the State of Connecticut from 5,000 for Grover Cleveland to 54,000 for a Republican successor, and you will do it again by this sort of tariff operation.

I do not say that some of these reductions may not be just or unjust. I do say this, that so far as your report is concerned, so far as any evidence is given by any action that you have taken, you have absolutely refused to these people any chance to be heard as to their industry, and you have absolutely refused to give any information as to your reasons for doing it in the report which you have made here. You have talked about the statistics of making iron and steel and of making steel rails. You have not given us a fact, not a scintilla of evidence, in justification of the reduction of the duty on these things. If you are ready to admit, as the chairman of the committee said last night, that you have ignored all that sort of thing, that you have absolutely given it no consideration, that your only purpose is to eliminate every scintilla of protection and simply put a burden of tax upon these industries without any regard to any other feature of the tariff, well and good; we will meet you fairly and squarely on that ground in the next election, and many of you will not be here to make your reply then. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I think it was paragraph 18 that Mr. MANN. the Clerk read last. That is the paragraph in reference to automobiles, and so forth. It is another illustration in the bill either of a tariff for competitive purposes or of a tariff for revenue purposes. The report shows that there are produced in the United States articles named in the bill for 1910 to the extent of over $165,000,000; that during that year there were imported nearly $3,000,000 worth; and that the committee estimates under this bill there will be imported only $1,700,000 worth. Certainly that is not along the line of a competitive tariff, but if we take it on the grounds of a revenue tariff, how about that? The import duties on these goods under the existing law for 1910 were over $1,200,000; for the last fiscal year, nearly $750,000, while the committee estimates only $680,000 in the future. The bill can not be defended as to this item either on the ground of competition with foreign producers, if their estimate is correct, or on the ground of a revenue duty, but it only illustrates that the figures offered by the committee in their estimate of importations are absolutely unreliable. Everyone knows that under the provisions of this bill there will be great importations from foreign lands of goods made by the aid of foreign capital and by the hands of foreign workmen, which will take the place of goods produced here by the aid of American capital and by the hands of American workmen, at the expense of the prosperity of the entire community and Nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

19. Axles, or parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks, or forgings for axles, whether of iron or steel, without reference to the stage or state of manufacture, not otherwise provided for in this act, or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That when iron or steel axles are imported fitted in wheels, or parts of wheels, of iron or steel, they shall be dutiable at the same rate as the wheels in which they are fitted.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As soon as I reached this section of the bill vesterday when it was presented, I telegraphed to the Sheldon Axle Co., a concern which is engaged in manufacturing steel axles in the city of Wilkes-Barre, located in Luzerne County, which comprises the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor to represent. I would like to read the telegram which I sent them and their response. I telegraphed as follows:

The bill which is presented proposes rate 10 per cent ad valorem upon axles generally. How would this rate affect your business?

The response is as follows:

Am afraid this would let in French, German, and Belgium axles. Rate should be 20 per cent, from our experience.

When searching about the House for information I discovered this pamphlet, headed "Caucus Print," and upon referring to article 19 found a statement regarding axles. The tonnage of imports increased in 1911, 15 per cent, while the percentage of value has-increased 50 per cent, showing, I think, that the more expensive axles are now being imported, upon which American labor should be employed.

Furthermore, it states under the line of duties that the estimate of revenue for a 12 months' period under the proposed bill will be $12,500, whereas in 1911 over $17,000 was collected, showing an estimated decrease in revenue; not what the bill proposed to accomplish—an increase in revenue.

I do not care to go into the matter to any considerable extent, except to say that in this factory there are upward of 1,500 men employed. The factory was started in Auburn, N. Y., about 40 years ago, and in order to obtain economies in production, cheaper fuel, and additional capital it moved to Wilkes-Barre, The gentlemen in control have not made any extravagant profits in the business. They have improved the methods of manufacturing and are producing what are known as long-distance and other first-quality axles using ball bearings, and so forth. I do not believe they have made much profit in axles, as they have also engaged in the manufacture of springs and in other ways have endeavored to make a profit out of their undertaking.

If their statement is correct, this provision in the pending bill will cause a great deal of distress, not only to them, but also to the men in their employ. A main purpose of these gentlemen has been to attract to that city industries that will give employment to those men who can not find employment in the mines, as they become exhausted.

The majority having informed the House that this bill shall pass to-day, and pass unchanged, without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," I shall not waste the time of the House in taking a vote upon an amendment to this section making the duty 20 per cent, as it should be, to properly protect this American axle business and the American workmen that are employed in it. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

23. Cast-iron pipe of every description, cast-iron andirons, plates, stove plates, sadirons, tailor's irons, hatter's irons, and castings and vessels wholly of cast iron, including all castings of iron or cast-iron plates which have been chiseled, drilled, machined, or otherwise advanced in condition by processes or operations subsequent to the casting process but not made up into articles; castings of malleable iron not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment; cast hollow ware, coated, glazed, or tinned, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, some months ago I had the privilege of addressing this House upon the tariff question, and inasmuch as that question will be one of the main issues in the coming national campaign, if not the paramount issue. I will beg your indulgence for a short time to-day upon the same subject, in order that my views may be more fully understood. To begin with, we must remember that in the colonial days many of our forefathers, monuments in whose memory adorn the various public squares and circles of this beautiful city, were deep students of the same subject, and many of their deductions and conclusions are of record in the public documents of that time. As I pass on in my remarks I shall take occasion to quote briefly from the views of some of those great statesmen. You will remember that the colonists themselves fought for independence, not alone over taxation without representation, but also over the tyrannical policy of Great Britain in refusing them the right to manufacture raw materials for their own use. The Colonies produced the raw materials in abundance, but the mother country, in order to make the Colonies wholly dependent upon her, passed laws which utterly prevented them from founding factories and establishing mercantile industries. Even men skilled in the various lines of industry were prevented from coming to America-England was simply playing a "brace game" with the Colonies, and they knew it to their sorrow long before the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. David H. Mason, who wrote an admirable history of the United States on the tariff question, used the following language, which completely sums up the situation:

It was the strong desire of the colonists to be set free from their helpless and debasing reliance on Great Britain for their manufactured supplies, so that they might manufacture their own raw materials without hindrance and enjoy to the full the development of their native resources, which lay at the bottom of the great struggle. Here is to be found the germ of our protective system, a germ which became the creative principle in forming a "more perfect Union" and in enacting the tariff of 1789 as measures of deliverance from industrial bondage to Great Britain.

It will be admitted by all that during the long six years from 1783 to 1789 the country was on the verge of bankruptcy. It was swamped with the manufactures of foreign countries, and the money of our own people went into the pockets of foreigners. Foreign factories took on new life, foreign ships dotted the oceans in their traffic with American ports, and our own industries, impoverished and decadent, could not withstand the competition of foreign lands. Our money went into other channels, and we are left only the records of those times under free-trade principles to guide us in the future.

It might be well to ask ourselves "Whither are we drifting?" There seems to be a natural inclination on the part of malcontents in all parties to get as far away as possible from the great principles of industrial and political liberty as laid down by the framers of our Constitution. They were great men, and it mattered little what section of the country they represented, they agreed upon the great fundamental truths of government.

Madison summed up the intention of the framers of our Constitution as follows:

The people adopted the new Constitution, I believe, under a universal expectation that we should collect higher duties. We must do this if we mean to avoid direct taxation, which was always a means of revenue in the particular States.

We find men here to-day contending that Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and other eminent statesmen of the early days were wrong in their convictions and did not understand or comprehend the structural form of our_Government or the necessities of the public welfare. It would appear rather strange, to say the least, if those men experienced in the conditions of the times and whose lives were devoted to the upbuilding of the Government and whose acts and deeds form an inspiration for all mankind knew less of the principles they laid down than those of us who live a century afterwards by virtue of what they did for us. The American people may be misled for a time, but in the end they will come back to the cardinal principles of protection.

Our people are the Government. Is it so anywhere else on earth? Our laws are what we make them, and the industrial and commercial industries of the country are just what the people permit them to be. We can judge of nothing in the future except by the experience we have had in the past, and judging by that experience I do not believe the American people want a repetition of the free-trade doctrine so vigorously advocated by our friends across the aisle who, by virtue of their number, control the legislation of this House. You ask why are number, control the legislation of this House. so many skilled mechanics in the mills and factories of Great Britain paid fairly good wages-largely because the employers of Great Britain had to pay good wages or lose all their best mechanics. It was the protective policy of the United States that raised the wages of the skilled mechanics of Great Britain, and not the free-trade policy of that country. Why is it that you can not go into a mill or a factory in the United States but what you will find workingmen from foreign countries, who have come to our shores seeking employment? Even will find England, of whom we hear so much, well represented. will find her laborers in every factory in America; and yet you say England is the highest-wage country in the world outside of America. Do these foreign workingmen like their positions in our American factories? As soon as they get money enough they send for all their relatives, even unto their "mothers-in-law." Go into the mines, mills, and factories of forcion Do you find any American workingmen? If you do, do you find them sending home for their uncles, aunts, and cousins? Answer me these questions, those of you who would strive to put our laboring men on a level with the foreign laboring man.

I represent a great mineral district—one of the greatest the world has ever known, and yet we need capital. We need new mines opened up and developed; we need more mills erected; we need more railroads, more factories, and more irrigation projects. Do not think for a moment that capital will come out of its hiding place until it can see protection. It needs it, and is entitled to it.

The time is gone when men can cry "Down with capitalists!" simply because they are such, and create maddening stampedes in our political life. Capital and labor are essential each to the other; neither is independent of the other. Labor needs protection just as much as capital; if anything, a little bit more. Capital can usually succeed in taking care of itself. If it has not sufficient protection here, it can go elsewhere. not see an adequate profit upon its business investments in a particular industry, it can go into another. It is essential to the prosperity of any country. Even the Members of this House are not opposed to capital, except those few who would scorn to take mileage when it is allowed them by law. Of course none of them would refuse for political effect. When would our greatest mines, mills, and factories be giving employment to labor if capital were withdrawn? If capital were suddenly or gradually withdrawn from our great railroad enterprises, from our telephone or telegraph companies, from our mines, mills, smelters, and factories, what would become of our laboring men? What would become of the Government itself? No; encourage all lawful business, whether big or small, and build up all the industrial and commercial industries of our country, and, by laws sufficiently strong, enforce a decent regard for the rights of all, and then will we prosper in all legitimate lines of endeavor. All any man can expect is a "square deal," and when he has received that he has no ground for complaint.

Why do some of you gentlemen hate to be classed as free traders? You say you do not believe in protection. You say you are in favor of a tariff for revenue only. A tariff for revenue only is free trade, leaving out the revenue. In other words, without the element of revenue you would open up the ports of this country to all the nations on earth. That would mean just what it meant to our forefathers, who from 1783 to 1789 experienced the only real test of free-trade doctrine this country has ever known, except during the time following the passage of the late lamented Wilson bill, which put the country on the down-grade for some time, and during which time every ranch and farm in this country wore a "sticking plaster."

Do you forget those days, gentlemen? Do you try to remember them? The people of the country remember them very distinctly, and when they stop to think of the causes which those hard times they will certainly cast their votes to avert them. How are the farms and ranches to-day? Are they covered up with mortgages? No. Why? Because we have pursued a protective-tariff policy. Our farmers were never more prosperous than now, and the workingmen were never in a better condition; and yet "calamity howlers" throughout the country who have never produced anything except "hot air" are trying to make them think that they are downtrodden and in a worse condition than any people on earth. I deny the imputation. I reiterate that the American people as a whole are the most prosperous and enlightened people on the face of the globe. They are so because of the policies of this Government and because foreign Governments are not permitted to make a dumping ground of America for shoddy goods, wares, and merchandise, made by cheap coolie and convict labor. We want to purchase American-made goods, even if we pay a little bit more for them. Workingmen, what about your clothes? It is true you can not afford much of a wardrobe; but I have yet to see a sober, industrious, honest, and intelligent workingman from the Atlantic to the Pacific who could not afford a decent suit. Have you? I think not. Look at your dinner table when you have an extra "spread." You will find enough imported goods, wares, and merchandise on it to set you to think-Foreign-made knives and forks-made in England. You bought them, and the money paid some English workingman, some English merchant, some English manufacturer. Table cloth—made in Ireland. Some workingman in Belfast you assisted when you purchased it; some American industries you crippled and some American workingman you kept out of employment. Look at your dishes and saucers-made abroad, and your money went to support some foreign industry at the expense of a home institution. Look at your tea, your coffee, your salt, your pepper, your olives, your lemons, your prunes, and your sardines; all your money went to develop the particular industry represented by each in some foreign land, to pay some foreign laborer, when you could have helped a home industry. I want American-made goods, made by American workingmen, made in this country, and if there is any surplus goods let them be sold in foreign markets, so that the foreign dollars will eventually return to the pockets of the American workingman.

I desire to call your attention to some of the remarks of that great statesman, Henry Clay, who said in the United States Senate, in behalf of protection, as follows:

Why, sir, there is scarcely an interest, scarcely a vocation in society, which is not embraced by the beneficence of this system.

And then briefly stating the various industries and enterprises which would be seriously affected by an abandonment of the protective principles, stated:

Such are some of the items of this vast system of protection which it is now proposed to abandon. We might well pause and contemplate, if human imagination could conceive the extent of mischief and ruin from its total overthrow, before we proceed to do the work of destruction. Not to go behind the Constitution, its date is coeval with that instrument. It began on the ever memorable 4th day of July—the 4th day of July, 1789. The second act which stands recorded in the statute book, bearing the illustrious signature of George Washington, laid the corner stone of the whole system. That there might be no mistake about the matter, it was then solemnly proclaimed to the American people and to the world that it was necessary for the "encouragement and protection of manufactures" that duties should be laid. It is in vain to urge the small amount of the measure of the protection then extended. The great principle was then established by the fathers of the Constitution, with the Father of his Country at their head. And it can not now be questioned that if the Government had not then been new and the subject untried, a greater measure of protection would have been applied, if it had been supposed necessary. Shortly after, the master minds of Jefferson and Hamilton were brought to act on this interesting subject. Taking views of it appertaining to the departments of foreign affairs and of the Treasury, which they respectively filled, they presented, severally, reports which yet remain monuments of their profound wisdom, and came to the same conclusion of protection to American industry.

By a protective tariff based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, our people will be better fed, better clothed, better educated, and better prepared to meet the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

Bismarck, the great German statesman, in a speech delivered

Bismarck, the great German statesman, in a speech delivered before the German Reichstag, paid the following compliment to the protective principles of our Government when he said:

The success of the United States in material development is the most illustrious of modern times. The American Nation has not only successfully borne and suppressed the most gigantic and expensive war of all history, but immediately afterwards disbanded its Army, found employment for all its soldiers and marines, paid off most of its debts, given labor and homes to all the unemployed of Europe as fast as they could arrive within its territory, and still by a system of taxation so indirect as not to be perceived, much less felt. Because it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is mainly due to its system of protective laws, I urge that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff system of the United States.

Duty as a Representative of a sovereign State impels me to add my voice in behalf of the principles laid down by George Washington, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson, and scores of others of our forefathers, concerning the basic principles of protection and to protest as vigorously as possible against any attempt on the part of the legislative branch of this Government to abandon those principles which have made this Nation the admiration of the entire civilized world.

Shall we abandon the principles of protection as laid down by our forefathers? No! From the lofty Dome of this very building, sacredly dedicated as the Capitol of a free Nation, the Goddess of Liberty standing aloft, enlightening the world, cries out against it!

Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts, in a memorable address on the tariff in 1846 in the United States Senate, remarked that the difference between the state of things in Europe and America was that in Europe the question was "how men can live," and that in America the question was "how well can men live." That brief summary of the question by Mr. Webster is as true to-day as it was when he uttered it. Our people here have responsibilities not known abroad, aspirations not dreamed of in foreign countries, and we must not lose sight of the end to be attained by legislation, which will solve the question of how well can we live. We desire that legislation which will enable us to have plenty to eat, sufficient clothing to wear, educational and spiritual training for our children, and a competence to meet the ordinary requirements of an enlightened civilization.

Between 1812 and 1861 three free-trade tariffs were tried and found wanting. Three times was the country saved from ruination by a return to protection. That 50 years' of experience with the two principles about which this House is debating at this time ought to be argument enough to satisfy a reasonable man. It has never worked successfully in this country. It may in other countries; and, by the way, what will apply to Great Britain, France, or Germany will not necessarily apply We occupy a different position in many respects. diversified resources are greater and our climatic conditions different, and, all in all, we are so situated as to be in a better position for a protective tariff than any other nation on earth. We can live practically within our own borders, but once we tear down our protective duties and open up our ports to the world's productions, history will repeat itself, and we will be confronted with the same dire conditions that have followed every free-trade measure established by Congress. Our mills, mines, and factories will close down, our laboring men will stand in the "bread line," and the wheels of national progress will turn backward. The tariff of 1846 might be called a freetrade tariff. Of its operations President Buchanan, who was a member of President Polk's Cabinet and who had consented to an abandonment of protection which he had formerly advocated,

With unsurpassed plenty in all the elements of national wealth, our manufacturers have suspended, our public works are retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds are abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers are thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

Of the tariff of 1816, which reduced the duties, Col. Benton

No price for property, no sales except those of the sheriff and marshal, no purchases at execution sales except the creditor or some hoarder of money, no employment for industry, no demand for labor, no sale for the products of the farm, no sound of the hammer except that of the auctioneer knocking down property. Distress was the universal cry of the people, relief the universal demand.

A careful summing of up this question leads me to but one conclusion. It is based upon our experience of various trials of the doctrines of our friends-the majority-as well as upon logic and reason and upon the weighty testimony of our forefathers and the greatest statesmen of modern times, and that is that to establish a tariff schedule without regard to the element of protection is a mistake, to say the least, which will prove ruinous to our country.

Mr. Mason, in his admirable treaties on the tariff question, completely sizes up the situation in the following words: "All the prosperity enjoyed by the American people—absolutely all the prosperity, without any reservation whatever—from the foundation of the United States Government down to the present time, has been under the reign of protective principles; and all the hard times suffered by the American people in the same period has been preceded either by a heavy reduction of duties on imports or by insufficient protection, thus refuting all free-trade theories on the subject."

From the very beginning of our Government it will be seen that efforts have been made to encourage home productions. The Continental Congress encouraged home production in all ways possible. England, for her own selfish ends, discouraged and restricted it. As early as 1789 Congress passed a protective tariff measure. I will quote the first two sections:

SECTION 1. Whereas it is necessary for the support of the Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures that taxes be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported:

SEC. 2. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That from and after the 1st day of August next ensuing the several duties hereafter mentioned shall be laid on the following goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States from any foreign port or place.

It will be seen that our forefathers in drafting the tariff bill of 1789 had in view the protection of our manufactures. But you say, "Do not protect them; they will combine and form a trust or a monopoly, and fix the prices of both their products and labor." But suppose you do not protect them. You are But suppose you do not protect them. simply driving them out of business and giving the foreign manufacturers the right to supply our goods, wares, and mer-chandise, and to combine and monopolize all they desire, and employ their own working people, while our working people are without employment and compelled to purchase their products and pay not only the wages of their workingmen, but the prices fixed by the monopolies and trusts of foreign countries.

Thomas Jefferson, whose memory we all revere and whose statesmanship is unquestioned by all you gentlemen across the aisle, in a letter which he wrote to Benjamin Austin in 1816, said:

Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort,

Perhaps no man living or dead had a deeper, broader, and more profound comprehension of the tariff question than the late President McKinley, whose advocacy of the principles of protection is admirably set forth in these words:

Protection is admirably set forth in these words:

Now, whatever system will bring the largest liberty to the masses of our countrymen, the largest independence to the workman, the highest incentive to manual and intellectual effort, the better comforts and the more refining environments to the family, can not be dear at any price. It must be conceded that the protective system has accomplished much in this direction; certainly more than any other system. It has dignified and elevated labor; it has made all things possible to the man who works industriously and cares for what he earns; it has opened to him every gateway to opportunity. We observe its triumphs on every hand; we see the mechanic become the manufacturer, the workman the proprietor, the employee the employer. It does not stifle but it encourages manly effort and endeavor. Is this not worth something? Is it not worth everything? Especially in a country like ours, where the Government is founded upon the consent of the governed, where citizenship is equal and suffrage without limit, is it not our plain duty to educate, improve, and elevate our citizenship, which is indispensable to the peace and good order of our communities and the permanence of our institutions? And the system which secures these advantages in a larger degree than any other, as experience has demonstrated, is the protective system.

Many of the Members of this House are straight-out "dved."

Many of the Members of this House are straight-out "dyed-in-the-wool" free traders. I did think when I first came here that they were all on that side of the aisle, but I have almost come to the conclusion that I was mistaken. However, this is a free Government and every man has not only the right but ought to vote and voice his individual opinions. The lines between the two old parties is pretty clearly defined. Any man, however, who believes in a tariff for revenue only should move over to the other side of the center aisle or into the Cherokee strip, where his identity would not be lost. I believe that all public men should declare themselves on public questions, so that the people would know where they stand and what principles they uphold. [Applause.]

By the way, we should not overlook the fact that there is a third party ably represented in this House by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger]. You gentlemen on the other side have been flirting with socialism for years. I have heard the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger] declare his principles aloud upon the floor of this House. There is no question as to where he stands. He is an astute politician and is playing "freeze out" with you gentlemen over there, and so cautious is he that some of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he that some of your rill and his he that some of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his he had not recome of your rill and his is he that some of you will see his hand before the "draw," he has taken a seat on this side of the aisle, and it is a safe wager that when he gets through playing and "cashes in" he will have all you have got and you will have the experience. He will have your whole party in another game or two and then the lines can be more clearly drawn. Protection or free trade-which side are you standing on, brother? [Applause.]

I notice that some enterprising business men have taken occasion to establish marble works adjacent to the Capitol Grounds; in fact, the Capitol is surrounded by costly, imposing, and unique headstones, and tombstones—some even of foreign make—and doubtless it was with an eye to doing business with Members of this House who commit political suicide these shrewd business men established their works in such close proximity to us. It might be well to order early, gentlemen, for the rush will be great during this session, and the grave diggers of America, too, are unionized and work only eight-hour shifts. After this Congress adjourns it will be all over with many of us, except the "flowers." Order your tombstones before you vote. The American people will write the epitaphs. I venture to say that most of the monuments will be inscribed as follows:

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF A FREE TRADES—"GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN."

We've laid you out in foreign garments;
Sleep, brother, sleep.
We've placed you in a foreign casket;
Sleep, brother, sleep.
We've planted foreign vines around you;
Sleep, brother, sleep.
We've reared a foreign tombstone o'er you;
Sleep, brother, sleep.

(This monument was made in foreign lands and chiseled by foreign artisans.)

Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill has evidenced considerable sympathy for this side po-The gentleman wishes us to be careful lest we will litically. hurt ourselves politically. [Laughter and applause.] I notice, in looking into the record of the vote upon the farmers' free-list bill, the bill that sought to take the tariff tax off of agricultural implements in the interest of those who toil to produce the food that supplies the world, that the gentleman from Connecticut voted against it. [Applause.] The gentleman from necticut voted against it. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], who has created considerable noise in opposition to this bill, also voted against taking this tax off of the farmers' implements. As to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], who has charged that we have cut the time so short for debate upon this measure that he can not discuss it, and he says the time is not far distant when they will have unlimited time to speak, and that will be to the American people between now and November, he, too, voted against the farmers' free-list bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I predict for you, gentlemen, that you will have unlimited time between now and November in which to discuss the issue, but since you have broken your promises to the people you will not have anybody to listen to you. [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Roberts], who has just taken his seat, speaks of political tombstones to be crected after the election bearing the lines, "Sacred to the memory of the free trader; dead, but not forgotten."

There will be more political tombstones erected over the prostrate forms of gentlemen upon that side than were erected even after the campaign of 1910 [applause], and the tombstones above your dreamless dust will read: "Here lies the standpatter, convicted of deceit and unfaithfulness to the American people; he died at the hands of an indignant and outraged electorate." [Applause on the Democratic side.] ectorate." [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Gentlemen upon that side have pretended to want more time to discuss the iron and steel schedule. We have given you more time now to offer amendments to one schedule, the steel and iron schedule, than you gave us to offer amendments to the entire Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, which had 14 schedules in

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, one gentleman on that side tells us that we "are slaves to the Democratic caucus." We have a rule in that caucus, the same rule that prevails in this House, that onefifth of those present can order a roll call. That roll call is kept and published to the world. The country is looking to the character of legislation that we bring from the Democratic caucus. And you Republican standpatters can not hide your hypocrisy and broken promises behind a cry of "Democratic caucus" in an attempt to mislead and deceive the people. The people will say, "If the woolen schedule, the farmers' free-list bill, and the iron and steel schedule are the fruits of a Democratic caucus, then long live the Democratic caucus." applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 10, line 8, the word "thirty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eighty," so that it will read "80 per cent ad valorem" instead of "35 per cent ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 10, line 8, by striking out the word "thirty-five" and inserting the word "eighty."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why does not the gentleman propose to make it 100 per cent?

Mr. BRADLEY. That would not be so far out of the way, from the standpoint of the Republican platform. The labor cost of this product is about 80 per cent of the factory cost. The mixed-duty rate under the present law was 77.69 per cent, in ad valorem equivalent, on imports during the fiscal year of 1911. This result, as well as my amendment, is exactly in accord with Republican policy, that seeks to protect American labor to the full extent of the difference in wages at home and abroad.

Mr. Chairman, I concede to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], who spoke at length yesterday, and to my friend from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] honesty and sincerity of purpose; but differing from them, I demand equal acceptance of my honesty and sincerity of statement and of purpose.

The industry referred to in the first two lines of paragraph 26, on page 10, is not a great industry. In the main it consists of a large number of small manufacturing establishments sprinkled throughout New England and the Middle States, touching Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, and Wisconsin.

It has been an industry of slow growth and keen foreign competition. The workmen connected with it to-day are, in great measure, American born and of the highest type of patriotism, intelligence, and mechanical skill. I speak advisedly, because in my own town is manufactured nearly one-half the total American product. Where I live has grown from a hamlet of 600 persons to a thriving town of more than 4,000, keeping pace with the growth of this industry, and these workmen of whom I speak are my personal friends. Eighty per cent of them are American born, and 65 per cent were born in the valley where they have since lived and where they toil to-day. Seventy per cent of them own their own homes. They are the town; they are the board of town government; they are on the boards of the churches; they are patriotic, high-minded American mechanics, who ought not to be treated with unnecessary cruelty, as they certainly will be should this measure become a law.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. Let me finish my remarks, and then if the gentleman has any question to ask I will gladly answer. The proposed duties, with reference to this item, are reduced in ad valorem equivalent 55 per cent from existing law and 35 per cent below the ad valorem equivalent of the Wilson bill. One hundred thousand dollars in mixed patterns of foreign goods would to-day have a landed value of $177,690. Under this provision the landed value would be $135,000, a reduction of 24 per cent

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the same volume of product is to be continued this reduction of 24 per cent must be met from the profits of the manufacturer, to a fair extent, and from the wages of the workman; there is no escape from it. As my statement differs from that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, time alone must prove which is right.

Of this item the imports last year amounted to $804,000. It is estimated by the Ways and Means Committee there may be an increase of $1,000,000 in the first year, providing this act takes effect. That would mean a landed value to the amount of 50 per cent of the total manufacture in the United States. Is it deliberately proposed that these American workmen of whom I speak shall work three days in the week where they are now working six? Or shall such a condition be avoided by meeting this proposed reduction in foreign value through a corresponding reduction in domestic profits and wages?
Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BRADLEY. Not now, but after my statement

Mr. BRADLEY. Not now, but after my statement is finished I will gladly yield. I presume, based on former experience, if history repeats, as it probably will should this proposition become a law, that in succeeding years the American workman with determination, under great necessity, with genius, industry, and skill, will contest the encroachment of foreign products and may consent to accept such drastic reduction as this measure would compel. But this must mean that much less of comfort and that much less of the betterments of life for these highclass American workingmen. And for whose benefit? For the benefit of the consumer? No; if history repeats, as it doubtless will, the consumer will get only the small end arising from increased imports of foreign goods at reduced cost. The reduction will unquestionably be followed by some degree of advance in the price of foreign goods, of a wider profit margin for the jobber and the retailer, and a very small proportion indeed for the consumer. But the big end in grief and loss in wages will come to the American workman.

Mr. Chairman, I look upon this question philosophically. have lived through the tariff changes of 50 years, as boy and man, as workman and employer. The years of 1857, 1858, and 1859 are just as clear to me as are the years of 1893, 1894,

I have no doubt whatever, if the party represented on the other side of the aisle is successful next fall, as it may be, that the years 1913, 1914, and 1915 will witness equal condi-tions of distress, equal conditions of grief, of sorrow, and de-privation as in the years 1893, 1894, and 1895. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.
Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he is engaged now in finanufacturing the articles mentioned in this paragraph to which he has offered an

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have not a penny invested in the stock of any interest that may be affected by this measure, nor have I had since my people first sent me to a seat in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly. Mr. CANNON. If an American citizen must divest himself of all property that might be affected by legislation, could anybody be chosen as a Representative here—even a tramp—because he is interested in the hand-outs?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I beg my friend from Illinois will ask that question of the gentleman from Missouri. It is suggested, however, that I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hamlin] if he does not own property this bill may affect. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to ask that question of my friend from

Missouri. [Applause.]
Mr. HAMLIN. I will state that I do not.
Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Missouri own any property?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am fortunate enough to own a little, not-withstanding the Republican Party has been in power in this country for 16 years.

Mr. CANNON. Why, the gentleman would be competent as a legislator if he owns anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, at the end of line 18, on page 10, the following: "Provided further, That no article named in this bill shall bear the following rates of duty if said article was produced by labor working more than eight hours a day."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. It is the same point on which the Chair has before ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order against the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. But, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard before the Chair does that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, my understanding was that the action of the Chair in ruling heretofore on this point of order was predicated upon the fact that the amendment was offered at the wrong portion of this proposed bill. During the discussion at that time the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] called attention to the fact that on page 10 there was an administrative feature in connection with this bill where this amendment would be in order. The preceding proviso in this paragraph reads as follows:

Provided further, That all articles specified in this paragraph shall, when imported, have the name of the maker or purchaser and beneath the same the name of the country of origin die-sunk conspicuously and indelibly on the shapk or tang of at least one or, if practicable, each and every blade thereof.

If that provision of this bill is in order, then I insist that the amendment which I have sent to the desk is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane. As the Chair understands the rule, no amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenues which is not germane to the subject matter of the bill, nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not germane, because it is sought thereby to interject into the proposed legislation a proposition that is nowhere found in the bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, if I had a majority on this side, I would be very glad to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

27. Sword blades, and swords and side arms, irrespective of quality or use, in part of metal, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. Beadley] was pleading eloquently and earnestly that the present high tariff on pocketknives and like cutlery should be left unchanged, and I interrupted him with the following very pertinent question:

I would like to ask the gentleman if he is engaged now in manufacturing the articles mentioned in this paragraph to which he has offered an amendment?

He answered me that he is not, and I gladly accept his answer as true. The reason I asked this particular question of this as true. The reason I asked this particular question of this particular gentleman was, I had just been informed that he is now engaged in manufacturing the very articles on which he was pleading to have the present high tariff maintained, and I felt if that were true the country ought to know it. I am glad to learn that I was incorrectly informed as to the business of my friend from New York. But I do maintain that the country has a right to know all that it can know as to the motives behind the actions of Members on this floor. Nineteen hundred years ago He who could read men's hearts said "where your treasures are there will your hearts be also," and to apply that great truth to men in official life I would say that where your money is invested there will your vote and influence as a rule

Mr. Chairman, a protective tariff confers special privileges on a certain class of individuals—those engaged in the lines of business that is protected. It gives to those individuals thus situated an undue advantage over the overwhelming majority of their fellow men, a principle that is wrong per se. And I am old-fashioned enough to believe that when one of those fellows who is enjoying this unfair and unjust advantage over his fellows under the law happens to get into Congress he has no right-certainly no moral right-to take advantage of his position here to give to himself a further advantage, under the guise of law, over his fellow men.

A Member of Congress has no more right to do that than a judge would have to try an issue where the title to valuable property is in controversy between himself and another and decide the issue in his own favor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HAMLIN. For a question. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it reprehensible for a workingman, whether he be a member of the labor union or not, to aspire to be an employer of labor, to become an employer, or to amass capital?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not mentioned anything of that kind. But I will say that I think it praiseworthy for any man to try to succeed in life, provided he gives the other fellow an equal opportunity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But is it improper for an American-born citizen to hope to be something better than his father was?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; nor a foreign-born citizen, either; but my friend from Pennsylvania again attempts to lead me far afield from the thought I was trying to pursue. Here is exactly what I mean, so the gentleman will understand me. If I were a manufacturer of articles that are embraced in any tariff schedule, I would not vote on it. I do not believe that I ought to vote upon a proposition in which I have a financial interest, unless I had the courage to vote against my personal interest, a thing one is not likely to do. It is extremely probable that I could not decide impartially between by own financial interest and that of the people who would suffer if I prospered by reason of the advantages a protected tariff on that article would give me.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. 'Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAMLIN (continuing). I would like to cite the gentle-an to the example of an illustrious Republican Senator, and one who is now a candidate for the Presidency, who two years ago refused absolutely to vote, as a Senator, upon a certain schedule of the tariff because he had money invested in the business to be affected by that particular schedule, and I commend him for his integrity. I believe that every man on this floor, whether he be Republican or Democrat, who is financially interested in the manufacturing of any of the things contained in the tariff schedules for which he votes, that fact ought to be known to the American people, and if he is just and manly enough to vote against his personal interest the people will applaud him. If he vote for his personal interest they will condemn him. Let the people know the facts.

The safe way for a Member so situated is to tell the facts and then refrain from voting. He ought not to be permitted to come here and conceal his real purpose by hypocritically shielding himself behind labor in order to work his own selfish ends in fixing a tariff law that will give him an advantage over his fellows

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no question about that upon either side of the House. That is prohibited by law and the oath of office a man takes; but the gentleman will concede this, because the gentleman thinks well and far ahead, that all the teachings of the common schools of the United States tend toward the elevation and improvement of the opportunities of youth.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, that has about as much to do with what I am talking about as the Ten Commandments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentle-

Mr. HAMLIN. In fact, I think the Ten Commandments would Mr. HAMIAN. In fact, I think the Ten Commandments would fit in much better with what I am saying than with what the gentleman suggests. The commandment says, "Thou shalt not steal"; and that is what I am saying. Again, the commandment says, "Thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbor's"; and that is what I am saying. Yet the beneficiary of this protective tariff, for which you plead so fervently, robs the consumer and covets what his neighbor has, so much so that he seeks to have maintained a law that will enable him to get from his neighbor that which he could not get the without this from his neighbor that which he could not get without this legal advantage.

Gentlemen stand here and plead for a high tariff in the name of labor. If you succeed you will enable the tariff barons to commit, under the guise of law, two separate and distinct crimes:

First. Larceny. You will enable them to rob the balance of the people for their own individual enrichment.

Second. Embezzlement. You let them have the increased profits which they will be enabled to take from the people by reason of this tariff with the understanding that they will turn this increased profit to labor, for you say it is given to them for the benefit of labor, therefore it is labor's money. They will not turn these increased profits over to labor, but will appropriate them to their own use, hence they will add to the crime of larceny that of embezzlement.

The gentleman from New York in pleading for a tariff on cutlery says he wants it so that the manufacturers of this article can pay their men increased wages-clearly wanting us to believe that the cutlery manufacturers of his State, being different from other fellows engaged in a protected business, would give labor the benefit of the increased profits which will come to them by reason of a high tariff.

But, Mr. Chairman, I deny this. I have here a statement issued by Miller Bros., Empire Knife Co., and the Challenge Cutlery Corporation, engaged in manufacturing pocket cutlery, which shows that the cutlery manufactures of New England are not unlike the other avaricious, selfish "special interests" of this country. They are all going to hold down the cost of manufacturing the article just as low as they can, and labor being one of the principal items of cost-indeed, the gentleman from New York says in the making of pocket cutlery the labor cost is 80 per cent of the total cost. That being true, we all know that the manufacturer will get his labor just as cheaply as possible so as to hold down this principal item of cost. That is the reason these protected concerns object so strenuously to labor unions. They know that they can hold the labor cost down among nonunion workmen very much easier than among union men, and I find that the men engaged in the business for which my friend from New York so earnestly pleaded are fully alive to that fact and are opposed to union labor. A friend of mine handed to me the following statement printed in the Meriden (Conn.) Daily Journal, under dates of January 2 and 5, 1912, which speaks for itself:

In the adjustment of any questions of difference that may arise the company will treat with its employees as such and not as members of any organization.

Ten hours shall constitute a day's work for finishers and nine hours for grinders, and the company expects and will insist that each employee shall work full time when the necessary work is furnished him. Individual day wages will be based on the individual's earning capacity at piece prices.

Any employee desiring to be absent from work or desiring to leave the factory during working hours must first obtain consent from the office or superintendent.

Each employee is expected to do his work according to the accepted standard.

Acceptance of employment from this company after January 1, 1912, will be considered as acceptance on the part of the employee of the above conditions as specified.

Employees not reporting for work January 15, 1912, will be considered no longer in the employ of this company.

When asked as to the reason for such action, Mr. Rockwell, of the Miller Bros. Cutlery Co., stated to a reporter of the Journal that the action taken by the three companies was merely to place the three Connecticut companies, which produce only about one-third of the total American production of pocket cutlery, under the same working conditions which obtain in the cutlery factories of New York State, which produce practically the balance of the total American production, and which work under the sanction of the same union under the above conditions.

which work under the sanction of the same union under the above conditions.

Rev. Thomas B. Powell, pastor of the Center Congregational Church, had this to say on the subject:

"It is to be noted that the Miller Bros. have issued their letter simultaneously with the Challenge Cutlery Corporation, of Bridgeport, and the Empire Knife Co., of Winsted. There seems to be cooperation between the several companies to effect uniform and just conditions of labor, from their standpoint. These three companies, or corporations, produce a third of the total output of pocket cutlery in America, and the conditions thus sought are to be like those in New York State; that is, there is cooperation among companies engaged in the same business to effect certain conditions; why not encourage collectivism among the laborers, whose avowed purpose it is to improve the conditions under which they work?

"This is liberty in name, but not in content; it is rather a species of industrial fixity."

The Miller Bros. letter to the men of the grinding and finishing departments said that employees not reporting for work as individuals January 15 will no longer be considered in the employ of the company. The national executive committee of the Pocket Knife Grinders and Finishers' Union has taken up the matter.

So we have this situation. The employers combine to fix cer-

So we have this situation. The employers combine to fix certain conditions on which labor shall be employed, but they deny labor the right to combine to say upon what terms their labor shall be sold. Yet, gentlemen talk here about these manufacturers treating labor justly. It is ridiculous.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I did not intend to open my mouth touching the consideration of this bill. It has been determined by a majority to force this bill through. We have been killing time for days and weeks, and we will continue to kill time while business is being prepared for the House by the committees, but this bill is to be considered for one day and driven to its passage without amendment and without debate. The majority, being responsible, has the right to work its will. You, gentlemen of the majority, can and will work your will and will be responsible. Possibly you will receive approval. That remains to be I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but in 40 years I have twice, if not three times, seen Democratic majorities flap their wings and crow, and have, when clothed with power and legislated, failed to receive approval.

All of this kind of talk you are induging in is familiar to me. However, I took the floor not to discuss the bill, and I should not have said a word concerning it, I apprehend, had it not been for the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN]. Oh, somebody is interested. Sir, the leader of that side of the House has avowed his interest in a great iron-ore and coal property. Does anybody doubt that he has not a perfect right to help frame this bill and vote for it? The very foundation of this bill is, as you claim, that you will make it for your own interest and that of everybody else, in order that you may buy pocketknives cheaper, that you can buy more of another man's labor than you can now for yourselves and your We upon our side claim that the better rewards come families. to labor by utilizing our own markets instead of submitting ourselves in competition with the balance of the world at onehalf of the wage in the United States. And some gentleman grows overzealous and inquires, "Do you own something in a manufacturing plant?" I do not. I wish I did own something, along with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], in that wonderful property of which I am glad he owns a part.

If you are to have people as legislators who are not interested as a result of their legislation, where would you get your legislators? Would you shut out every man who has a farm? He wants to buy his agricultural implements cheaper. Every man who raises cotton or corn, and every man who owns a house, every man who has a family, or hopes to have one, you disqualify. You disqualify every American citizen. As I said, by a question I submitted a moment ago to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bradley], you would shut out the tramp who has but one suit of clothes, and sometimes not that, to his back, as he walks along-not willing to work, but interested in good times-because there is greater capacity then for the charitably disposed to give him a hand-out. Oh, a truce to such a position! I do not criticize the gentleman personally. I am criticizing a class of people who, on the Chautauqua platform and in the newspapers, are talking about the interest that somebody has in something, and that therefore he is a bad

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak against the proposed amendment. Mr. Chairman, the discussion has turned from the merits of this bill and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bradley] to a very important subject-important because it raises the question of the right of a Member of Congress to withhold information as to the extent of his property interest in the subject matter under legislation. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] proposes to change the rate of duty carried by this bill on cutlery from 35 per cent ad valorem to 80 per cent, and while he was discussing the merits of his amendment the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hamlin] interrupted him by asking him what interest he had in the cutlery manufacturing industries in his district, whereupon he promptly replied that he had none now, and had not had any since his first election to Congress.

But, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished leader and ex-Speaker of this House [Mr. Cannon] became somewhat incensed at this inquiry, and has just delivered an eloquent address in defense of the rich legislator and his right to conceal his property interests in matters under legislation. He adverts to the question that it is impossible for a man to become a Member of Congress without having some business and owning some property, unless he be a tramp without a suit of clothes. Mr. Chairman, there are two different and distinct capacities in which men can own property—one is that capacity which nature handed down from heaven, general in character, and which applies to all men alike; the other is that capacity which is created by legislative enactment, conferring special privileges upon certain men. Such rights are corporate in character and depend upon legislation solely for their existence. We have seen that those who own business operated under these special privileges have been exceedingly prosperous in the past. Not only have they been prosperous, but they have been able to accumulate vast fortunes, and by putting these fortunes together in the form of trusts they have annihilated competition and gained control of the American market, with power to regulate the output of the finished product and to fix the price thereof at will.

We have seen, Mr. Chairman, that by legislation, not only in the legislatures of the States, but by the National Congress, certain rights have been conferred upon these corporations, until they have grown so large and become so powerful that we woke up about two years ago, or a little more, and found ourselves under the direction and guidance of a few commercial masters, whose standard, as laborers, we could not desert. entailed upon man the necessity of furnishing himself with food, raiment, and shelter. And as the corporations own and control a large portion of the raw material and all the finished product necessary to supply us with these necessaries of life, we are compelled to look to these masters not only for these supplies, but for employment, in order to get money to pay for them. The sun has set upon the day of many owners of property and many masters of business and has dawned upon the day of few masters owning and controlling the business of the country, employing the masses whose muscle and genius operate and perpetuate these mammoth enterprises for a wage barely sufficient to sustain life, sharing in none of the profits.

The time has come, Mr. Chairman, for an inquisition to reveal the motive which prompts special legislation. Experience has shown that it is the floodgate through which great fortunes pass. I take it as a matter of course, Mr. Chairman, that no man has a right to stand on the floor of this House and fight for the advancement of any corporate interest in which he is personally concerned and hide behind the plea that private affairs should not be invaded by the public, and refuse to make known such interests on inquiry. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The public has a vested right to know what interest he has and what prompts him to legislate and fight for legislation. When John Quincy Adams was elected to a seat in this House, many years ago, he was the owner of some national bank stock, but he went out on the market and sold it before he took his seat, in order that he might be free to discharge his duty to the people of this country, and the world has lauded the name of John Quincy Adams ever since for his honesty and patriotism. [Ap-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Aus-TIN1 asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a little while ago it was said by my colleague from Illinois, the distinguished ex-Speaker of this House [Mr. Cannon], that the leader on this side of the House [Mr. Underwood] admitted publicly that he was interested in the iron industry of this country. He is to be com-mended for that fair and frank statement, because the people of this country have a right to know where the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee stands upon legislation which affects their interests. By his candid statement not only the people of this country but the world know where OSCAR UNDERWOOD stands [applause on the Democratic side] so far as his personal interests in corporations are concerned. I understand that he has gone further and said publicly that all of his worldly holdings, except his home, are tied up in the Birmingham iron industry.

I trust that every other Member of this House will be as free to admit and to acknowledge what prompts him to act here in this legislative body upon the public questions which concern the people at large. What reason can be advanced for not making public the corporate interests of every Member of this Not only has Oscar Underwood made known to the public his interest in the iron industry, but, as chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee, he has reported out a bill on the floor of this House proposing legislation directly against his own interest. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I say that no man can question the motive of OSCAR UNDERWOOD in the legislation upon Schedule C-the iron and steel industry.

Mr. Chairman, during the special session of the Sixty-second Congress we passed a law requiring Members of the House and Senate to make public all moneys and things of value expended to secure seats in Congress, and also to make public all promises made for appointment to office or for political favor. A few days ago the House passed a bill, with an amendment, requiring the President to make public the names of all persons who recommend the appointment of Federal judges. the States have passed corrupt-practices acts, and the time is ripe to take one more advanced step by passing a national law requiring candidates for the Presidency to make public the amount of money, property, or thing of value used by them or their friends and relatives for the purpose of securing their elections, together with all promises made by them for political positions and the names of each person to whom such promises have been made.

There is no good reason why the names of all men recommending the appointment of the members of the Supreme Court and the members of the President's Cabinet should not be made public. Neither is there any good reason why the members of the Supreme Court and the members of the President's Cabinet should not make known to the public their connection with corporations and reveal to the public the corporate interests, if any, which they hold in the corporate industries of the coun-These high positions of trust are filled with servants of the people, and the people have a right to know the qualifications of their servants in advance, so that they may be able to select only those who will be faithful to the interests of their masters-the people. To this end, in elective offices, the newspapers, magazines, and the people are investigating the record not only for honesty and efficiency but as to the connection which candidates have with corporations and publishing the same during the campaign, so that the voter may be able to cast his vote with full knowledge of the character and standing of the candidate of his choice.

It is high time, Mr. Chairman, to put a check upon legislation which prevents the people from sharing in the profits of their own toil. It is said that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. With equal propriety it may be said that eternal vigilance is the price of bread. The common people have the power in their own hands to press the button and turn on the light by demanding publicity of corporate affiliations in every department of the Government. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe, that the great corporate industries of this country have grown to such mammoth capacity and to such unlimited power to-day because of the fact that men who have legislated in the past in both Houses of this Capitol have either had interests of their own which prompted that legislation or they were servants of masters who directed them how to work and how to vote.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] moves that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this paragraph is closed. Without objection the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn. The Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

38. Screws, commonly called wood screws, made of iron or steel, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire some information if I can secure it. I notice that, according to the report of the committee, under paragraph 38 the production in the United States has averaged something over $6,000,000, and that the committee estimates that there be $2,000 worth of importations under this proposed schedule. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that it would not be of a prohibitive character?

Mr. PALMER. It would be less prohibitive than the old

How much less prohibitive would it be? Mr. PALMER. It would mean that more would come in.

Mr. MANN. In the year 1911 $2,000 worth was imported. The gentleman from Alabama says he proposes a competitive rate and is opposed to a noncompetitive rate, and he estimates that the revenue derived from the amount of importations that would come in would be $16 on an article which has a consumption throughout the country of nearly $7,000,000 worth. He recommends a change in the rate where he estimates the revenue will be $16 annually out of a consumption of nearly $7,000,000. I do not see where the competition would come in.

Mr. PALMER. It would deprive the American laborer of that much less wage.

Mr. MANN. It would deprive the American laborer of his wages in making that much of the product. I can not get an answer from the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can give the gentleman an explana-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gave an explanation on the steelrail business

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not know that the gentleman was asking the question seriously. Of course, these estimates of revenue were made by the statisticians of the Ways and Means Committee, and also by the Treasury experts. The bill was referred to them. I think on many of these items the estimate of increased revenue is below what it will be. This bill runs $800,000 less than the Payne bill in its estimated revenue. I actually think that the importations will be greater, and that the amount of revenue will run over that of the Payne bill, and I think this particular item will show a greater increase of importations. But I did not give my own figures or my own views on it. I thought the House was entitled to the estimate as made by Mr. McCoy, the Treasury expert, and I put those figures in.

Mr. MANN. The committee does not stand for that estimate, then?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Treasury Department stands for it, and I think in the main the figures are correct; but I think the importations and the revenue will be larger than the estimate that the Treasury expert has made.

Mr. MANN. If the Treasury statistician is correct, then the gentleman will not complain that this is putting this bill on a competitive basis?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We cut that rate more than half in two. It is doubtful as to whether many screws would come into this country under any circumstances; but at least we give the benefit of the doubt to the Treasury. The rate is practically prohibitive now. If it still remains prohibitive the next time this schedule is revised——
Mr. MANN. The next time it is revised the rates will go up, and not down.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman is correct, and the Treasury is correct, why then probably if it was a Republican caucus, that caucus would insist on making the rate still more prohibitive, because the gentleman contends the rate is prohibitive now.

Mr. MANN. No; I contend that the estimate shows it is prohibitive; but if the gentleman desires to have what he calls a competitive rate, why does he not propose a competitive rate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell the gentleman candidly that I do not think there is a likelihood of much importation of nails, screws, and similar articles under any circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the object of having a duty of 25 per cent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because we gave the Treasury the benefit of the doubt, to see whether that would really be a revenue rate.

Mr. MANN. If that explanation satisfies the gentleman, I can not complain of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

41. Aluminum, aluminum scrap, and alloys of any kind in which aluminum is the component material of chief value, in crude form, aluminum in plates, sheets, bars, and rods; barium, calcium, magnesium, sodium, and potassium, and alloys of which said metals are the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the words "forty-six and nineteen one-hundredths," so as to make the rate 46.19 per cent ad valorem instead of 25 per cent ad valorem.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 9, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-six and nineteen one-hundredths."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the present duty on aluminum is 7 cents per pound, and the change in this bill, as I understand it, is to 2½ cents. I think that is based on a report of the Treasury Department. However, the purpose of the subcommittee having this paragraph in charge, as I understand it, was to fix a duty of 4 or 41 cents per pound.

There are 14 companies that are manufacturing aluminum in foreign lands and 1 company in America. We are consuming about 45,000,000 pounds of aluminum in this country and are importing about 12,500,000 pounds made in France and other European countries.

This is practically a southern mineral. The only aluminum or bauxite in this country is in Arkansas, in the district represented by Mr. Robinson; in Alabama, in the district represented by Mr. Burnett; in Georgia, in the district represented by Mr. Lee; and in Tennessee, in the district represented by Mr. Moon. All the raw material for the aluminum manufactured in this country by the American Aluminum Co. comes from the Southern States.

As we all know, this is a new mineral, discovered about 25 years ago. It is an American discovery and invention, and at the beginning the price was $80 a pound. It is now down to about 17 cents a pound in America. If the duty on aluminum as carried in this bill becomes a law, instead of buying 12,500,000 pounds in foreign lands we will buy more, and we will buy less from an American company that draws its entire output from four southern States.

It will increase work in France, where bauxite is 10 per cent richer than that of the Southern States, and where they pay 80 cents a day for labor as compared with $2.50 a day in the aluminum mills of this country. If the Democratic Party in control of this House desires to give this entire business to the American company, drawing all of its raw material from the Southern States that elect Democrats in this House, except two, here is an opportunity to develop that industry and give it practically the aluminum business of this country. It is just a simple proposition, whether we will send our money to France and keep the mills going there and furnish employment to those who mine the raw material in southern France along the Mediterranean shore, or whether we will give that employment to the southern men in Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, and Tennessee, and the finished article in the mills owned by American citizens and furnish employment to American mechanics.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this bill, but I am a little weary of hearing the repeated appeals that Members of this House make to provide occupation and labor for somebody in this country and high wages rather than allow the importation of goods from foreign We have at last the illustration furnished by the gentleman from Tennessee appealing for four districts in the South that have aluminum, asking that these four districts be given the monopoly of the aluminum industry because it might furnish a little labor for a few people in those four districts, even though it might increase the cost of aluminum products to every man, woman, and child who use them in the whole United States. It seems to me that it is time that we consider, not the foisting on the country of a monopoly for the benefit of a few of the constituents of four Members of Congress, or any number of Members of Congress, but that we should consider the great multitude of people who buy such products and pay inordinate prices for what they buy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I notice in the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] that he seemed by inference, when discussing the importing of products of labor and importing laborers, to be willing that laborers be imported here freely, but not willing to admit foreign products; he seems to be willing to allow free importation of labor into this country for the benefit of the capitalist, but he is opposed to the entry of any product into this country for the benefit of the laborer.

The truth is, the gentleman only sees one side of this question. He only sees the interest of the man who is declaring dividends out of the monopolies foisted on the country. We see the interest of the vast masses of the people who pay these dividends in increased prices. A right mind sees both these things

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly. Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman is attempting to misrepresent me upon the legislation.

Mr. HARDY. I have not intentionally misrepresented the gentleman. I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can show the gentleman that he is misrepresenting me. The gentleman said that I stood for legislation that meant free importation of foreign labor. I have introduced a bill here to restrict undesirable foreign immigrants.

Mr. HARDY. I said the inference drawn from the argument of the gentleman was that he had no objection to the importation of foreign labor except the Chinese, but he did have an objection to the importation of foreign products. I call the gentleman's attention to that part of his argument where he said that as soon as these immigrants, these foreigners, come in here and went into the steel mill, they paid taxes and became American citizens. He had reference to the frequent charge that the Carnegie Steel Co. imported into their shops foreign labor and brought down the wages of the laborer of this country by the importation of these laborers.

The gentleman did not have a word to say as to keeping foreign pauper laborers out, but he did criticize the importation of foreign goods, and it is the inference I drew from this position of the gentleman from Tennessee. I knew nothing of his bill, but that was the inference I drew from his argument. His argument was against admitting all foreign products and not against, but rather in favor of, admitting all foreign labor except Chinese.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. HARDY. Certainly, the gentleman may answer me. say that to-day it is common knowledge that in the great steel works of this country men who can not speak the English language have been imported in order, I presume, to get cheaper labor. I am informed that 70 per cent of the labor in these great industries that are held up before us, and to whom we are asked to grant a favor, can not speak the English language. I say that it is time for the voice of gentlemen like the gentleman from Tennessee to be lifted in behalf of the American born, in behalf of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph presents an example as striking as can be found in all the length and breadth of the tariff law of the statement which is often made that the present tariff law results in an increase in price of the product to the American consumer and at the same time in an inordinate profit to the manufacturer who produces the product. I know of no concern in the United States which has less right to come to the Congress as a suppliant for further favors than the concern for which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] has made his plea, the only concern in America which is now engaged in the manufacture of aluminum. It is a monopoly pure and simple. It is the only company-and there is no individual other than that-engaged in the manufacture of aluminum in this country. It owns all of the southern ore beds of which the gentleman from Tennessee has spoken. has plants in East St. Louis, along the Niagara River, and along the St. Lawrence River, and it controls absolutely all of the output of aluminum in this country.

Under the operation of this protective tariff, this Aluminum Co. of America has been built up from a concern of $3,000,000 of capital to a concern with $35,000,000 of capital, on which it earned last year 18 per cent; and by the admission of its own officers only $3,000,000 of that capital has ever been put into the concern in cash by the stockholders. In other words, during the 20 years of its existence during which time it has during the 20 years of its existence, during which time it has sold its product to the American people at high prices, it has been able to not only earn and pay dividends on its stock, but it has accumulated sufficient cash surplus to amount to $32,000,000, and to-day the American people are being asked to pay a return not only upon the honest capital put into the plant but upon these accumulated profits as well. So that the earnings of the concern last year were actually 180 per cent of the amount that the stockholders put into the plant. Aluminum sells in this country at a price which is greater than the foreign price by precisely the amount of the duty that is imposed in this country. They use the duty to keep the price up-7 cents on aluminum and 11 cents on aluminum in sheets-and the American price quoted by the Aluminum Co. of America exceeds the foreign price by exactly that figure. The result. therefore, of our cutting this duty in two and bringing the tax on aluminum down to 4 cents and on aluminum in sheets to 6 cents will simply be to slightly decrease the enormous profits which the American Aluminum Co. has been able to make in the past. There is no line of industry covered by this schedule which is going ahead faster, so far as consumption is concerned, than aluminum. Twenty years ago it was almost unknown and sold for $60 or $80 per pound.

To-day it is the commonest kind of utensil used in the houses of the rich and poor alike, and there is bound to be a continu-ance of that demand, so that the increased consumption will take care of a part of the competition which will come into

I say that this presents a typical case where it will not lie in the mouth of the American manufacturer to declare that the Democratic Party is trying to ruin business enterprise, for it is perfectly clear that the only result of our law will be to decrease the price which the American consumer will have to pay for the article, while not decreasing the present outrageous profits of this monopoly below an honest return for the capital [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement or insinuation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Hardy] I wish | to say that I have never uttered a word on the floor of this House that could be twisted or construed into favoring an importation

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I hope I did not make any insinuation. I attempted to draw conclusions from the gentleman's argument.

Mr. AUSTIN. All right; then I will say there is nothing upon which you can base such a conclusion. Mr. Allen, a gentleman on the floor, yesterday interrupted me and asked what number of foreign-born laborers were in the American mills, and my reply was this, that the great majority of the for-eigners in the American mills come here for better wages and better homes and to become American citizens, and that we preferred on this side to legislate for that class of foreigners rather than the foreigner who remains in the old country and owes his allegiance to a foreign flag and who had no purpose and showed no disposition or intention of becoming an American citizen.

Mr. HARDY. I want to say, if the gentleman will permit, whether the argument justified my conclusion or not will appear from the argument as it is in the RECORD. I think it did.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have introduced a bill to restrict undesirable immigration, and I will make a speech for it and vote for it; and I made a speech here on the floor of this House in the Sixty-first Congress in favor of the restriction of undesirable foreign immigration, and if you gentlemen want to keep them out why do not you report a measure of that kind?

Mr. HARDY. I am not talking about the gentleman's bill, but about his argument in regard to the importation of foreigners to fill factories here.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pretty sensitive on that subject, because it is a burning measure in my district, and my position is known. I never take a position at home but I attempt in good faith to live up to it here in the House of Repre-

Mr. HARDY. I do not doubt the gentleman's good faith, but the inference came from the argument the gentleman made in reference to the introduction of products rather than labor from China. He seemed to greatly object to importing products, but scarcely, if at all, to object to importing laborers.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am opposed to the introduction of foreignmade goods, made by our foreign competitors, that could be made in an American workshop by American workmen-

Mr. HARDY. By the foreigner who pays the tax.
Mr. AUSTIN. And I would keep out the undesirables of Europe and the Orient that flock to this country from the four quarters of the earth.

Mr. HARDY. But the gentleman was justifying having these goods made in this country by foreign laborers.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I do not attempt to justify the importation of foreigners in the American mills, but I would rather have the goods made by that class of labor than to permit the foreign labor and the foreign mills to have this market.

Mr. HARDY. The statement of the gentleman will appear in the Record, and whether my inference was just will appear.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, under the present law out of the average of 45,000,000 pounds of aluminum we have been able to get into this country under the present law 12,500,000 pounds of aluminum, and there arises the simple question whether we will give increased orders to the manufacturers of aluminum in France, where they have a duty of 71 per cent, where they make over 40,000,000 pounds of aluminum, whose local consumption is less than 6,000,000 pounds, and permit them to dump their surplus on the American market, where it is offered for sale at 10 to 11 cents a pound—whether we will permit them to have the American market under this bill, or whether we shall retain it for the Aluminum Co. of America that employs our own laboring men.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ten-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

42. Antimony, as regulus or metal, antimony ore, stibnite and matte containing antimony but not containing more than 10 per cent of lead, 10 per cent ad valorem on the antimony contents therein contained: Provided, That on all importations of antimony-bearing ores and matte containing antimony the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores at such establishments they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer, designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entry shall be liquidated thereon, except in case of ores that shall be removed to a bonded warehouse to be refined for exportation as provided by law, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph; antimony, oxide of, 25 per cent ad

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Clerk stop reading when a Member rises and addresses the Chair. I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph and one that shortly follows are very good illustrations of the new rules of the House, which were said to be designed to permit the House to legislate. The Chair this morning sustained the point of order upon an amendment which was offered on the ground that it might or was relating to the administration of the law, and must therefore be in the administrative portions of the tariff law. Here is a paragraph most of which relates to administration. The gentlemen who introduced the bill had the right to put that in the bill.

The committee which reported the bill had a right to report it in the bill, but under the ruling of the Chair, if any gentleman in the great House of Representatives desired to offer an amendment to put the very item into the bill which is now in the bill, it would have been ruled out. The gentleman who introduces the bill under the rules has the right to say what shall go into the bill, but the House itself is without the power of determining whether it would insert such an item in the bill. That is a great reform in the rules, namely, to say that the gentleman who introduces the bill, the committee which reports the bill, may insert in the bill an item which the House itself can not insert, because the item would relate to some other part of the bill as an administrative feature of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

44. Bauxite, or beauxite, crude, not refined or otherwise advanced in condition from its natural state, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 12, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof e word "twenty."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, bauxite is the crude or raw material from which aluminum is made. The present duty is $1 a ton, and, as I have stated, there are only four States in the Union which produce it, namely, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, and Arkansas

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. What is it worth on the market? Mr. AUSTIN. About $4 a ton-between $4 and $5 a ton. This material is used not only in the manufacture of aluminum, but in the manufacture of paper, and also in the purification of water plants. Excepting the American Aluminum Co., the greatest consumers of the raw material are located in the States of Pennsylvania and New York. They are now being supplied under the present tariff laws with bauxite from France. The mines of the South are unable, on account of the low tariff and low transportation from the Mediterranean ports, to sell this bauxite on the Atlantic coast to the users in Pennsylvania and other eastern States. They have a market in the Mississippi Valley as far up as Detroit and Chicago. If the duty is cut in two there is practically no market for the bauxite mines of Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, or Arkansas. It is simply an extension of the zone that we have heard about in this discussion for the sale of foreign goods in the interior of the United States. I am anxious, as a Representative from a southern State, to see that industry developed—to see labor employed in the mines here rather than in the mines of France. House and I ask the Representatives from the States I have named to stand by the industries of their localities rather than the industries of far-off France.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the proposition made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] as to this paragraph 41, in reference to aluminum, and I have listened with equal interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee on the question of bauxite.

After getting home, when the Aldrich bill had been passed, a distinguished engineer, whom I will not mention because he hopes for employment in the future, came to me and said, "I want to put you onto something," and he gave me the tariff figures protecting the aluminum company in the Aldrich bill. He said, "I worked for that company for a great number of years. It has an absolute monopoly in this country. It has no competitor. It has a complete field in this country, and it has its branches in Canada." He went on and stated substantially what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] has told us. "And, moreover," he said, "that company controls practically all the bauxite in this Nation and have their experts watching out for every new field." And he mentioned these four States as practically containing all the bauxite in this country. That is the condition, and I ask that this proposition be defeated in the interest of the truth.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Aluminum Co. of America does not sell a pound of bauxite in Pennsylvania or the Eastern States.

Mr. NELSON. But it uses it? Mr. AUSTIN. The consumers there are buying it from France.

Mr. NELSON. I will ask you who owns the bauxite fields? Mr. AUSTIN. The aluminum company do not own a monopoly of the bauxite fields; they only own 20,000 acres

Mr. NELSON. Who owns these heads Mr. NELSON. They own 20,000 acres of it. Who owns these fields-most of them?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. NELSON.

Who owns them?

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose they do own it? Would not the gentleman rather buy it from them than from the foreigner?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if this item of bauxite in the bill, under paragraph 44, were offered from the floor of the House, under the reform rules of the Democratic Party, which they said were designed to give the House the power to legislate, it would be thrown out on a point of order. It is not in the metal schedule of the tariff law. It is in another schedule. The item is in paragraph 90 of the tariff law, which is not in the metal schedule. Under the rulings of the Chair now and heretofore, particularly at the special session of Congress last spring and summer, if a Member on the floor offered this item, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] would raise a point of order against it and the Chair would sustain the point of order. It is a queer rule which authorizes the House to consider a tariff bill and permits the gentleman who introduces it to insert items in the bill which do not relate to the schedule proposed to be amended, but will not permit anyone else on the floor, when the bill is under consideration, to offer such an amendment.

When this item stays in this bill, if it should become a law, there will be two provisions in the tariff law relating to bauxite-one providing the tariff rate suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] and one providing the tariff rate proposed by this bill. I have no doubt but that this will be the tariff properly collected, but it illustrates the fact that the claim of the Democratic Party throughout the country-a claim which, the Speaker of the House has frequently stated, the country sustained-that they desired to have control of the House partly in order that they might re-form the rules, so that the House should resume its original function, as they stated, of being a legislative body, was a false claim. The rules are not as liberal now as they were in the Sixtyfirst Congress and in any other Congress prior to this one. Under the old rules of the House, when the House was considering a bill like this, a Member on the floor could offer an amendment. Now the author of the bill can include something in it outside of the schedule under consideration, but the House itself can not insert an item, although every Member but one should be in favor of it, because the Chair would rule it out of order. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, 1 move to strike out the last word. Bauxite is a clay. It belongs in the schedule of earths. They have transferred it from there to the metal schedule.

When the question was raised about the duty on agricultural implements, which, under the present law, come in at the rate of 15 per cent, with a proviso that they should come in free from any country that admits our agricultural implements free-a provision designed for reciprocity in regard to those articles—to the question why they had not put those on the free list as they did on the free-list bill, the only excuse offered was this, that the gentleman who asked the question ought to know that those articles were in the schedule of sundries, in paragraph 470, and they therefore could not go into this bill.

Now I suspected, when they failed to put those articles on the free list, that they were a little doubtful about the pro-priety of their action on the free-list bill only a few months ago, and so they had left those articles where they were under the present law, unless, perchance—this bill is a good deal mixed up in its construction—unless by chance they come in under the catchall, or basket clause, at 25 per cent.

The fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that they then put those goods on the free list. They bring in this bill, relating to the metal schedule, and everybody knows that the component material of chief value in these goods is metal, iron or steel; and when they come to make up this bill they are careful to take out of the earth schedule, Schedule B, if I remember the schedule aright, bauxite, but they leave mowers and reapers and plows, all agricultural implements produced in allied industries, at the duty fixed by the present law. Last summer gentlemen on the other side manifested their zeal for the farmer by putting his meat on the free list and by giving him as a compensation free agricultural implements. Has that zeal waned, and is this simply a perfunctory excuse for not putting them on the free list in this bill? If the committee can do anything it pleases in framing the bill and the House can do nothing in amending it, this would have been a most appropriate place for free agricultural implements here, under the metal schedule, because it more properly belongs here than elsewhere in the bill. Oh, gentlemen, consistency is a jewel, but it is a jewel that has long since been lost by the latter-day Democracy. [Applause on the Republican

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, in line 12, after the word "state" insert "fluorspar."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not in order under this bill, and not germane to the bill or the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chai Alabama fully upon that point. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Referring to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] said a little while ago, the committee has a right, under the rules of this House, to bring in a bill and to make the bill as they see proper and place it before the House. They make up the legislation, and then matters that they bring before the House must be germane. The gentleman criticized the committee awhile ago for bringing bauxite into this schedule.

I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not criticize the committee for doing it. I criticized the rules for giving the committee the power to do it and not giving the House the power to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It shows very clearly that the committee ought to have the power. Here is bauxite, which was originally called a clay. The clay in the bauxite is now shown to be the container of one of the most useful and valuable metals that we have. Bauxite is just as much the ore of aluminum as iron ore is of pig iron or steel rails. The com-mittee brought bauxite into this paragraph because the aluminum was already here. Iron ore, the raw material for pig iron, is in the paragraph, and lead ore, the raw material for pig lead, is in the paragraph. So we brought in bauxite, the raw material for aluminum, and it properly belongs here. But fluorspar has no connection whatever with the iron and steel schedules. Therefore, I contend, taking it from Schedule B, where it is now, and inserting it in Schedule C is certainly not germane under the rulings that the Chair has already made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism of the gentleman from Alabama in introducing the bill, for including bauxite in the bill, or of the committee for reporting it. I do not know from personal knowledge whether it ought to be in Schedule C or Schedule B, where it now is. I do not care. My criticism was directed to the rules of the House, which gave to the committee, or the introducer of a bill, a monopoly of the power to determine what the House should consider in a tariff bill, a power which the House did not reserve to itself.

Bauxite is included in paragraph 90 of the Payne tariff law. So is fluorspar. The gentleman from Alabama now says that bauxite is the base of aluminum, but that fluorspar is not related in any way to the metal schedule.

Why, Mr. Chairman, fluorspar is absolutely essential to the manufacture of metals from iron ore, and is just as much related to the provisions of this bill as any other item in it. It is just as essential to the manufacture of iron from iron ore as is bauxite to the manufacture of aluminum. The item in the bill proposes to amend the law as to paragraph 90 of the Payne tariff law. While it does not nominally pretend to amend the law, it does, in fact, amend the law, because otherwise the standing tariff would apply to bauxite. Of course the Chair understands, as everyone else does, that by this provision in the bill, if it becomes a law, the tariff on bauxite is reduced to 10 per cent, although the law of paragraph 90 of the Payne law will still read that bauxite pays a duty of $1 per ton. Now, it certainly is germane to that paragraph of the bill; it is germane to the bill because it is absolutely an essential element in the manufacture of iron and steel from the iron ore, all of which are provided for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Alabania to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Under Rule XXI the Chair is unable to understand what relation fluorspar has to bauxite, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

49. Tinsel wire, lame or lahn, made wholly or in chief value of gold, silver, or other metal, 10 per cent ad valorem; bullions and metal threads, made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, 30 per cent ad valorem; fabrics, laces, embroideries, braids, galloons, trimmings, ribbons, beltings, ornaments, toys, or other articles, made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, bullions, or metal threads, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 25, page 15, after the word "metal" strike out "ten" and in-rt "five."

in 4, page 16, same paragraph, after the word "beltings" strike 'ornaments, toys, or other articles."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is presented because of an increase of duty on raw material that enters into the manufacture of Christmas goods in this country, and to restore the rate in the existing law on the manufactured article. The industry is comparatively a new one. It consists almost entirely of the use of tinsel wire in the preparation of Christmas-tree ornaments. It has grown to some proportion in this country, and has been aided by the tariff that has existed. There was no such industry in this country some years ago, but by reason of the imposition of a duty and by reason of the fact that capital was induced to enter into the enterprise, workmen were employed in the manufacture of raw material which was brought in from abroad, principally from Germany, and was made up here into the finished articles for the American market. I know of no instance in which the general question that has arisen in this House as between the majority and minority upon the question of protection is better illustrated than in this case. We would not have made these goods in the United States had there not been a protective duty on the finished product. In view of the fact that the protective duty was laid, we have been able to make them here and hundreds of men are now employed in this new and useful occupation.

By way of explanation, since the question was raised a little while ago, I want to say that I have no personal interest in this measure except that I am a consumer of these Christmas articles, because they are necessary to properly ornament a tree as the children desire. I have to get them at the festive season.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly. Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Does the gentleman believe that the adoption of this amendment will tend to lessen the cost of this material to the consumer?

Mr. MQORE of Pennsylvania. The cost of the material?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The finished product. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To the consumer. I understand there is competition in the country, and that has kept the price at a moderate amount.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. So the gentleman thinks that the price will be reduced by increasing the duty?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would undoubtedly be reduced if we gave more encouragement to men in this country who have capital to invest and compete with each other.

Mr. YOUNG of Michiga. In view of the admission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he is a purchaser of these articles, does he not think he is disqualified from offering the amendment and voting for it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I appreciate thoroughly the point of the gentleman from Michigan, and say that I am obliged to plead guilty, because the good wife does purchase this material in the festive season; but by the same token there might be a lawyer or two in the House, and we have many able lawyers here, who would have to leave the House or quit voting, because in their many years of practice, somewhere along the line, they might have been interested in some question affected by these bills.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman from Pennsylvania put this upon the ground that he is doing it for the children?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, not necessarily. I am doing this with a view of inducing some one who has capital to invest in Colorado to go out into that State with all of its brilliant prospects and open up an enterprise there that will give employment to labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the presumption is that the Committee on Ways and Means wanted to report a reduction of duties in this instance. They have actually increased the duty, and doubled it, so far as the raw material entering into the manufacture of these trifling Christmas objects are concerned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would call the gentleman's attention to the Treasury figures on that proposition. On page 63 of this report he will see that we have not doubled the duty, that the average ad valorem duty for 1911 was 10.45 per cent, and we left it at 10 per cent, practically, and did not cut it at all. This is a matter of luxury and a considerable revenue producer, a competitive article, and the items in this paragraph have been changed very little from the Payne rate. If he will look at the Treasury report he will see that instead of raising the duty we have left it at 10 per cent, instead of 10.45 per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Waiving the question of competition, which the gentleman concedes has already developed in this country in the manufacture of these articles, I will say that I have been informed, and my opinion seems to be borne out by a comparison of the records, that this bill fixes the 10 per cent ad valorem duty upon tinsel wire, lame, lahn, made wholly or in chief value of gold, silver, and so forth, and that the Payne bill fixes that duty at 5 cents per pound.

I am informed by those who are interested, who had no opportunity to appear before the committee, and who came in suddenly this afternoon feeling this new industry was in peril, that that is an increase of almost double the Payne rate. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment will pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The figures quoted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in this report did not apply to the items which the gentleman is discussing, but applied to all the items carried in the paragraph, on some of which the duty was over 60 per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true. My amendment does not apply to all the items in the paragraph, but to only a few, and the statement I have made pertains to those few. the interest of these industries rising in this country, giving an opportunity for the employment of capital and labor, I ask that the amendment may pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 41, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

51. Lead-bearing ore of all kinds, and lead dross, 25 per cent ad valorem upon the lead contained therein: Provided, That on all importations of lead-bearing ores the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores at such establishments they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer, designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entries shall be liquidated thereon, except in case of ores that shall be removed to a bonded warehouse to be refined for exportation as provided by law. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso in the paragraph that under Rule XXI the committee had no right to insert an administrative feature in this bill, and that the gentleman could not introduce a bill carrying an administrative feature that relates to any other part of the

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I only have to say in answer to that that the administrative features in this bill are in the present law. This does not change the present law.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. This is a new rule that was put in before the rules were changed.

That provision might have been put in from the floor of the House, but under this new rule you can not do it. not put in a provision from the floor of the House, and I make the point of order that that which the House itself can not put in a bill the committee can not put in a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule does not impose any restrictions on what the committee may put in the bill. It relates only to amendments to provisions in the bill, after they are brought in. Mr. MANN. I did not quite hear the Chair. Do I understand the Chair to hold-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was making a statement and will repeat it for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I hope for the benefit of the whole House. beg the Chair's pardon, but we could not hear the Chair

The CHAIRMAN. The rule does not lay any prohibition as to what the committee may incorporate in the bill. It only relates to amendments and provides that those amendments must be germane to the subject matter of the bill or to particular items in the bill to which they are offered as amend-The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not appeal from the decision of the Chair because I think the decision is erroneous. were in the chair, I should rule the same way. for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that under the rules of the Democratic Party adopted in this House a man introducing a bill and the committee reporting it can hold an item in order that the House itself, with all of its power, can not insert in the bill over the objection of a single Member. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois was not so well informed in regard to the rules, I might really think he was in earnest about this argument he has been

Mr. MANN. I am in earnest and well informed, I hope. Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois knows as well as I do that the rule about amendments being germane to the paragraph has come through a hundred years of the parliamentary history of this House. There never has been a time when an amendment did not have to be germane to a The addition that was placed in these rules when they were adopted required that they should be germane to the subject matter in the paragraph, but that does not apply to this matter in this case, this being an administrative feature. In the Payne bill it would not have been germane under your rules of the last Congress unless the committee itself had reported it, and they did report it, and we have not changed the language of their proviso.

It has always been given to the committees of this House the right to make up their bill, and the rules say that amendments offered must be germane. Well, now, how in common sense could you apply the rule relating to the germaneness, either under your rule and the parliamentary precedents of this House or under our rule, unless the committee has brought in something to which it could be germane? It has always been given to the committees to make up the bills, to determine what shall come before the House, and then, when they brought the subject matter before the House, the question has been as to whether it was germane to the paragraph, and very reasonably so. It is in the interest of orderly legislation, the proper consideration of legislation, and the gentleman from Illinois knows that as well as I do. It is to prevent some Member from injecting into the bill, or injecting into the discussion of a bill, matters that are entirely foreign to the subject matter before the House. The purpose of this rule and the precedents before any rule was adopted by this side of the House was to secure orderly and well-considered legislation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the rule has always been that an amendment must be germane when offered to a paragraph and when offered to the subject matter of the bill. No question about that. But the question under this rule is whether an amendment can be offered to a bill on the floor of the House in the identical language which the committee itself can report. Take appropriation bills. The committees constantly report appropriation bills with items in them which could not be offered on the floor of the House over a point of order, but whenever the point of order is made on the item in the bill reported by the committee it goes out. The committee has no greater power to report an item in a bill contrary to the rule than a Member has to offer that amendment on the floor of the House. If a Member can not offer a proposition over the point of order, then the committee having reported it must lose it from the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois refers to Rule XXI, which provides that legislation shall not be carried on appropriation bills; but did the gentleman from Illinois ever hear of a point of order being made against the consideration of a bill reported by a committee because it was not germane? And if it was not germane, to what was it not germane?

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama did not hear me, he was possibly engaged on something else; but I stated that I agreed with the ruling of the Chair and took the appeal to emphasize the fact that, under the reform rules of the Democratic Party, a committee could report an amendment which a Member on the floor of the House could not offer, contrary to all the rules of all the legislative bodies at all times until the gentleman from Alabama took complete and autocratic control of this House as boss of the Democratic majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 51, page 16, by striking out the word "twenty-five," in lines 10 and 11, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty."

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a new Member in this House, but I am learning a few things, and one of them is that there is not very much hope of the Republicans securing the adoption of any amendments to [Laughter on the Republican side.]

I want to say to the gentlemen across the nisle that I have no quarrel with them for proceeding along these lines. We on this side of the Chamber would do it, and we ought to, if we were in control. It is up to you on that side to perfect this bill, because you will be responsible for its consequence.

If I were to offer an amendment, it would be to the section to which the gentleman from Colorado has already offered one. It would be to the zinc and lead sections of this bill, because I represent a territory that, in part, is interested in lead and zinc, even in the State of Illinois; but I am fully convinced of the futility of offering any amendment by Members on this side of the House with the hope of having the same adopted.

But I have no quarrel with my friends across the aisle for not permitting us to put amendments onto this bill. Not at This may be a good bill. I am not criticizing it and could not in the few minutes allotted to me under the rules; but I do not concur in the views expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who so grandiloquently, a short time ago, assailed the men on this side of the Chamber for treating the men on that side in an arbitrary way a few years ago when a tariff bill was under consideration. I want to say to him that of all the bills that the Republican Party has ever en-acted into law on the subject of tariff, even if done by machine methods, never one of them closed an industrial plant in this country or struck the name of an American workingman from the pay roll. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But, gentlemen on the other side, with all due respect to you, I shall not support your bill, because of the manner in which it has been prepared and submitted to this House. I am aware that tariff schedules should be changed from time to time in this great country of ours, where commercial and industrial changes are taking place constantly. It is a matter of necessity, in order that the rights of the producer and consumer may be properly safeguarded. I would make the same criticism of my own party if a bill were prepared and reported in the manner in which this bill has been considered. I have long felt that the present system of making tariff laws is wrong; that there ought to be a commission to prepare such bills along scientific lines and to lift this great question of tariff above politics and place it on a patriotic basis. [Applause.]

In my judgment there are only two things to be considered in drafting a tariff law. One is revenue and the other, in my judgment as a Republican, is protection to American industry and American capital. And, after all, reduced to its simplest form, that simply means this: America for Americans. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is all it means, a square deal for the American citizen, and I for one stand for that policy. I was a candidate for election to this House as a Representative from Illinois in one of the greatest agricultural and industrial districts in the United States on a platform in which I declared that I was opposed to the present system of preparing and enacting tariff laws; asserting that I was in favor of the creation of a permanent bipartisan tariff commission that would make the necessary changes in our tariff schedules from time to time when found necessary and expedient along scientific and patriotic lines. I was elected on that issue. To-day I have presented to me to be voted upon a caucus-prepared Democratic bill, which I have had no opportunity to study and investigate, the authors of which have stated on this floor that it is drawn with no idea of protection, but in accordance with the Democratic policy for revenue only. Gentlemen, as a Republican, believing in the cardinal principles of our great party, I can not vote for your bill. Republicans, standpatters, insurgents, and progressives, we are living in an age of progress, in a time when the intelligent masses of this country demand that tariff laws be drawn along scientific and patriotic lines and not in the old partisan political way. Let us stand together for this

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. McKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. As I said, I am not quarreling with the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, they are Democrats and have a right to their views, but as Republicans we are like Grant at Shiloh. We are driven to the last ridge. They have got us where we must fight and show our colors. Let us stand by our principles or take down our banner. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Grant licked them at Shiloh the next day.

Mr. McKENZIE. In conclusion, I want to say to you now, standpatters and insurgents, get together. [Applause on the Republican side.1

Let us stand for the principle of a tariff commission to pre-are our tariff laws. There is much more in this fight than pare our tariff laws. simply this iron schedule. There is much more at stake. It is the struggle between the forces who feel that we should have a bipartisan tariff commission and those opposed to it and who favor the old log-rolling system of enacting tariff laws. And, gentlemen, Republicans, if we stand together we will be like Grant at Shiloh the second day, the victory will ultimately be ours. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as an amendment to the amendment that where the words "40 per cent" are used the words "forty-four and nine-tenths" be used instead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "forty-four and nine-tenths."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order, so that we may hear what our Republican friend on the other side has to say in behalf of his proposed increase of this duty.

[Mr. RUCKER of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado. It has been clearly demonstrated that no amend-ment, however meritorious, if offered by a Member on this side of the Chamber, will be accepted, and I am wondering if the amendment of my Democratic friend will fare any better.

A remarkable situation is confronting this body. Here is a bill affecting nearly 200 industries, a bill that concerns the employment of hundreds of thousands of workmen, a bill that should require the careful attention of men intrusted with a large measure of the people's welfare, yet what is the condition? It was introduced in this House on Wednesday.

It was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on Thursday. Under the gag rule of yesterday we were granted but five hours of general debate, and now on Saturday it is to be disposed of under another gag rule by limiting debate to five minutes. This bill was drafted by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee without a hearing, and the majority of this House propose to push it through without the opportunity of a single amendment.

Maybe the bill is all that it should be; I hope it is; but how can gentlemen assume the responsibility for such hasty and ill-considered action with any degree of pretense to being members of a deliberative body?

I propose to vote for the pending amendment, and I trust it may prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the revenue item in these two paragraphs is rather misleading. The total revenue derived from lead ore and lead bullion for the year 1911 was $515,000; but of that amount $412,000 was taken out in drawbacks, so that practically the amount of revenue derived under these paragraphs was only about $100,000,

Now, there would not have been any importations at all, or to any considerable amount, if it was not for the drawback, because the lead ore that comes into this country does not compete directly with the western ore. It is brought in ships to New York and there smelted; and if it was not for the draw-backs, it could not come in at all, or these manufacturers would have to pay the freight clean across the continent on the ore, or tax the consumers of the finished product to that extent.

The duty to-day is really largely prohibitive when you consider that the total amount of duty raised on a 51 per cent tax is only about $100,000, implying $200,000 of importation.

The total consumption in this country amounts to something like $30,000,000. So you can see that the present rate of duty, when you leave out the lead ore that is brought in and reexported, can only come in on a drawback of 99 per cent, is prohibitive, and does not allow any benefit to the American people on this lead ore, although it may allow a benefit to the manufacturer and smelter when he exports it to a foreign country. We, therefore, thought that this duty on lead ore and lead should be materially reduced. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

52. Lead bullion or base bullion, lead in pigs and bars, lead in any form not specially provided for in this section, old refuse lead run into blocks and bars, and old scrap lead fit only to be remanufactured; lead in sheets, pipe, shot, glaziers' lead, and lead wire; all the foregoing, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11, page 17, strike out the words "25 per cent ad valorem" and insert the following: "Ad valorem rates equal to two-thirds of the existing rates of duty."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, knowing that the amendment will be rejected, I have drawn it in this rather inartificial form simply for the purpose of indicating what I think would be a fair reduction—that is to say, to two-thirds of the existing rates. In putting it at that figure I am sure that my brothers on this side will be glad to know that I am acting within a Democratic precedent, because I have come within the rates fixed on this item by the Senate metals amendment to the cotton schedule, which was passed by this House at the last session of Congress, and which this House, with my vote, attempted to pass over the veto of the President.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is not the gentleman also coming to about what this bill will be when it gets out of the Senate?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think I can say that if this bill comes back from the Senate it will carry rates as to lead and zinc that the Colorado delegation can vote for.

Mr. MANN. A Republican Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, we have some good Democratic Senators over there who know something about lead and zinc if the Representatives in the House do not. amendment to the cotton schedule provided that as to certain sections of the Payne bill the rates should thereafter be 70 per cent of the rates fixed in said sections.

That is to say, the rate on lead bullion, pig and bar, should be 70 per cent of the existing rate, and in this amendment I have fixed the proposed rate at 66% per cent of said rates.

Mr. Chairman, I know what a pleasure it is to some of our brethren here to be continually hearing from the sagebrush section of the country, and yet I think a very cursory view of our record here thus far would show that in the matter of tariff legislation we are pretty good Democrats. The Colorado delegation in the last session of Congress voted for a bill which reduced the rates on raw wool, which is one of the principal industries of that State, from 44 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem, a reduction of more than 50 per cent. We voted to place lumber on the free list notwithstanding the fact that the lumber interests of our State are such that the Federal Government has withdrawn one-fourth of the total area of that State in forest reserves. We voted to put coal on the free list notwithstanding the fact that we represent a large coal section, and now. Mr. Chairman, we stand here ready to submit to a reduction on lead and zinc which we believe to be in absolute accord with the provisions of the Democratic national platform, to wit, a reduction of one-third. I do not believe that any member of this body who is willing to submit to and support a reduction of one-third in the rates of duty upon one of the principal industries in his State, and which is the average in this bill, can be accused of being derelict to the platform of his party and of being a high protectionist.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Party was congratulated at the last session of Congress on its statement to the country that the Republican Party, having built up the industries of this country on tariff stilts, we were going to come down in the elevator and that we did not propose to jump off a skyscraper.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what a reduction of the tariff duties on lead bullion, pig and bar, from 93 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem is? I would like to inquire whether that is coming down in the elevator or jumping off a skyscraper? I would like to ask if a reduction from 93 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem is a gradual reduction, what would you consider a radical reduction? Certainly, Mr. Chairman, no gentle-man can claim that the business of lead and zinc mining is monopolized-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I would have asked for the time, but I have observed that my Republican friend, Mr. KENDALL, who is a delightful gentleman personally, whenever he thinks a Democrat is getting himself in wrong with his party, or getting his party in wrong, is always willing to help him out by getting an extension of time. [Laughter.]

I say that no gentleman can claim that the business of lead mining and zinc mining is monopolized, but I know what is in the minds of gentlemen here. It has not come out on the floor of the House. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the fact that the drastic cuts in this legislation fall on zine and lead, there is not one single fact adduced, there is not one single argument advanced, there is not one allusion made in the way of an explanation in this voluminous report as to what the effect of these rates will be, and what the conditions are in those industries, or anything in the way of information. And not only that, but the gentleman who presented this bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmes], who presented it most ably, and not only reflected credit upon himself but upon the majority side of the House, never let the words 'zinc' or "lead" fall once from his lips during the entire course of his presentation. No gentleman who has addressed the House in favor of this bill has said one single, solitary word about the sweeping, radical reductions made on lead and zinc in this bill, a most remarkable state of affairs. All of the arguments have gravitated around pig iron and steel rails.

Mr. Chairman, I live in a city which has the most complete steel plant within one fence that exists on the face of the earth, and that is the steel plant of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., employing between 4,000 and 5,000 men. One-third of the total male population of the city of Pueblo work in that plant, and yet if it would establish my claim to Democracy and of being a tariff reformer, I will make a motion in this body, and vote for it on the roll call, to put every single product of that mill, from steel rails to wire nails, on the free list. That is what I think about tariff reform in the iron and steel line. Not only that, but I turn to the bill itself with reference to these items that have engaged so much of the attention of gentlemen upon both sides of this House and I find, for instance, referring to pig iron, that the total value of importations of pig iron during a 12-month period, estimated under this bill, will be $2,050,000, as against $2,100,000 in 1910, under the existing law; and I turn over further to the item of steel rails and I find that the imports for a 12-month period under this bill will have a value of $150,000, as against a value of $150,000 and the winter that the imports for a 12-month period under this bill will have a value of $150,000, as against a value of $156,000 under the existing law in 1910, a decrease of the importations under the proposed rates of this bill upon both of these items, to which so much of the attention of the House has been attracted during the course of this debate. plause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Turning now to section 51, leadbearing ore of all kinds, it will be seen that importations of these ores, which were valued at $145,000 in 1910, are estimated to increase to $400,000 per annum under the proposed rates, and that in section 52, lead bullion, pig, and bar, and so forth, from $657,000 in 1910 to $1,600,000 per annum under the proposed rates, an increase of two and one-half times in ore importations and three times in bullion and pig.

No estimates are given on zinc ore or zinc in blocks or pigs, and so forth. The duty appears to be removed from the former and cut in two on the latter, without even a guess at the result.

I have run over the debates on lead and zinc in the Sixtyfirst Congress, and I can not think that the proposed reductions in the pending bill will be considered at the other end of this Capitol as having been made either upon a knowledge of the facts involved or with regard to their probable effect upon the industries concerned, or that they will insure against unnecessarily disturbing or impairing these industries. So certain am I that this will be the case that I will assert my belief by venturing the prediction that if and when this bill in the natural course of legislative procedure returns to this House the greatest changes and increases will be found to have been made upon these items.

In scanning the debates upon the Payne-Aldrich bill, I noted not only with interest, but with significance, the statement of that eminent leader of the progressive element of the Republican Party, whose influence was so potent, not to say controlling, in shaping the tariff legislation of the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, that it costs $35 per ton more to lay down Wisconsin or Missouri zinc ore at the Kansas smelter than Mexican ore. This statement was accompanied by no table or other showing of facts, but coming from a statesman so noted for his liberality that, although a Republican, he could shape a tariff-reform measure acceptable to a Democratic Congress, and so usually accurate and fully equipped as to his facts as to be conceded to be the best-informed statesman of his day, I shall be inclined to accept his statement of the ultimate fact as true until the contrary appears; and if true, or if approximately true, then the reductions on this industry will subject it to a very severe, if not unjust, competition.

In explanation of the comparatively small reduction on steel rails; that is to say, a reduction from 15 per cent ad to 10 per cent ad valorem, or about 35 per cent, and which it is admitted will result in no importations, it is urged that the dissolution of the Steel Trust or the breaking of the rail pool will permit the new rate of 10 per cent ad valorem to become sharply competitive. Why not display a like solicitude for the lead and zinc mining industries? No fear is expressed by the proponents of this measure with reference to the proposed lead and zinc rates that these rates may, in the event of some contingency, become severely competitive; it is known and intended that they shall become such.

I am willing that gentlemen whose indignation is righteously stirred by the exploiting designs of the Smelter Trust, both in Alaska and in the United States proper, shall at least have the satisfaction of knocking one eye out of this industrial octopus if they can do so without knocking both eyes out of the mining industry of the United States. It will be well, however, to bear in mind the fact that the plants of the Smelter Trust may be removed to Mexico; indeed, the smelters of Mexico are said to be as much under the ownership or control of the Smelter Trust as those of the United States, and the trust may temporarily at least transfer its smelting activities to Mexico, from which vantage of cheaper production it may enjoy the benefits of this legislation. But while the smelters may move, the mines are stationary.

Furthermore, the mining industry is not yet monopolized. It is not yet trustized. There are thousands of small mine owners. The men in the mines get good wages, not solely because the mine owner willingly shares in the profits of the industry, but in large measure because the miner is enabled through organization to exact a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. The laborer in the metal mines of the West is not only worthy of but receives his hire. He is an American citizen; not a peon.

The mining industry, which is not any too flourishing or prosperous, is worth considering. And none the less worth it merely by reason of the limited population in the area of country given over to the production of these metals. I would not favor summary reductions of from one-half to two-thirds upon the products of any section of the country, into which products tariff duties enter so materially as in the case of this industry.

There are tariff duties and tariff duties. The present duties on most manufactures of steel and iron are simply paper duties. Europe could not enter this country and compete with us in many of these articles even under free trade. The proposed reductions in the entire metals schedule are said to average But many of the reductions going to make up this 35 per cent. average of 35 per cent will not produce a single dollar's worth of importations. Take steel rails. A cut of 35 per cent is made in the duty on steel rails, but no steel rails will be imported Neither would any be imported under under the new duty. free trade. It is admitted by Mr. Carnegie himself that this product may be placed upon the free list without the slightest danger to the monopoly enjoyed by the domestic industry

The same can not be said of the 50 to 75 per cent reductions on lead and zinc. Mexican lead and zinc will be imported heavily under the proposed rates, and my opposition to these rates is based upon the feeling that the cut is too great to be made at one time, and that the sections of the country immediately affected are contributing more than their due share to the general benefit which the country will experience from the greater supply and the cheaper cost of these metals.

Then I am critical of these rates because they are not in accord with the practice and custom, amounting practically to a law of tariff legislation, that where a raw material carries tariff duties the rates on the finished product should be progres-The most radical tariff reformers concede that where a duty is imposed upon the raw material the manufactured product should carry a greater rate. This, I say, is fundamental in tariff legislation. It governs in the iron and steel sections of the pending bill. Iron ore is made free; pig iron carries a duty of 8 per cent ad valorem; all higher processes of manufacture 10 per cent or more ad valorem. On the other hand, lead ore carries a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem upon the lead content, and the same duty upon lead in bullion, pig, bars, sheet, pipe, shot, glazier's lead, and lead wire; that is to say, that after lead has been smelted, or manufactured into pipe, shot, or wire, it carries no higher rate of duty than the lead content of the ore. So far as I know, this condition will be anomalous in tariff legislation, either Republican or Demo-

The Wilson bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, is frequently appealed to as a precedent or criterion, but that bill at that time carried a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on lead ore, and a duty of 12 cents per pound on lead bullion, and so forth, a differential of 60 per cent in favor of the treated or manufactured product.

The proposed law will require the smelter and the maker of lead in sheet, pipe, shot, glazier's lead, and lead wire to pay a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem upon the lead content of the ore and to reduce or convert the same into bullion, pig, bars, sheet, pipe, shot, glazier's lead, and lead wire, and to compete with importations of the same without any additional duty what-ever. The rate upon all is the same. This, of course, places lead in these processes upon practically a free-trade basis.

The whole tendency of these rates will be-

To stop the importation of lead ore into the United States. To greatly increase the importation of lead bullion, and so

To limit American smelters to the American ore supply. To divert American ore to Mexico for smelting unless freight rates prevent.

To transfer both the mining and smelting of lead from the United States to Mexico.

This argument might be amplified, but I believe I have outlined some substantial objections to the proposed reductions, and have shown that they are too great, that they are unscientific, and that they were fixed without proper consideration or knowledge of the conditions to which they are to apply.

I regret exceedingly that upon this issue the delegation from Colorado has been placed in a position which makes it appear to be out of harmony with the position of the Democratic Party upon the issue of tariff reform, which, upon analysis and reflection, it will develop not to be the case. In view of the lack of consideration given the items of zinc and lead, they might properly have been omitted from what appears to be an otherwise well-considered schedule. It has been argued and reargued in favor of this schedule that the revisions average only 35 per cent. Such an advocacy of the bill implies that a materially greater reduction might be justly subject to criticism. We will accept the standard. We will not only vote for but support and defend a 35 per cent reduction. We believe such a reduction would be in accord with the pledge of the Democratic Party. We believe that had the Republican Party in its hour of opportunity made a reduction of even 25 per cent in the tariff duties the opportunity never would have come to the democracy to make a revision of the tariff. It would be, therefore, unjust in the extreme to us who are willing to accept a reduction of one-third upon these important industries of our State, nurtured as they have been in tariff law after tariff law by high duties, to question our desire for a thorough and substantial reduction of tariff duties all along the line.

The log-rolling blanket method of tariff revision had its chief fault in that all sections banded together to get what each wanted. Maybe the chief fault of the schedule by schedule method will be that the weaker sections will get less than they ought to have. There will be just as much politics and just as much sectionalism in tariff reform as in protective legislation. Some people may overlook this important fact. It will be brought home, however, without looking, to Members of small delegations representing sections having highly protected industries which are not common to the entire country. measure of consideration to be given industries and products which are material national assets should not be determined by either partisan or sectional numerals. These matters ought to be considered, and I have no doubt that even with reference to the pending bill they will yet be considered with the care and thoroughness their economical, not their political, importance demands. Then Members may know how they are voting, what they are voting for, and what the probable effect of the legis-lation will be. And then, and then only, may it be fairly de-termined whether Members from the affected localities are willing to make substantial contribution to the common good, or whether they are actuated by a selfish desire to advance local interests at the expense of the common good.

Several gentlemen wish to be heard.

from Idaho that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer my amendment as an amendment to the amendment, and my object in offering it is in order to call attention to the radical change that will be made

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is this an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Idaho offers it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MANN. Well, it does not relate to the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Well, it does not relate to the same thing.
Mr. FRENCH. It relates to the same paragraph; yes.
Mr. MANN. Well, I have no objection, although I think it will be very confusing if agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, one difference between my amendment and that offered by the gentleman from Colorado is that my amendment seeks to place the duty upon lead upon a specific basis instead of upon an ad valorem basis. mind, as has been said repeatedly on this floor and by students of economic questions for many years, the ad valorem system as a system of taxation is not defensible. More than that, the present bill in regard to the lead schedule is a proposition that can not find defense, because it is a proposition that has received no inquiry upon the part of the committee in the way of hearings. The people from my State and from the West have with Republican Representation opportunity to be heard. It affects some 25,000 people on the Republican side.]

in my State alone and affects an industry that annually turns out some $25,000,000 worth of ore in that one State alone. Yet it is proposed here, with only a very few moments' discussion, to strike down the protection to that industry to a point which, if I am not inaccurate in the information that I have, would close every lead mine in my State with possibly one exception, and that one is one that can be operated with the minimum of expense.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would not tax the indulgence of this House so often in the consideration of this bill if it were not for the fact that the constituency I represent is most deeply interested in the various items and proposed reduc-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. AUSTIN. I certainly made that assertion, Mr. Chair-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it is proper for him to stand upon the floor of this House and represent his constituents and their interests?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, that is what I have been doing on every proposition that has been offered in this House.

They are appealing in vain. Their only hope for the welfare of the men who work in the lead mines and zinc mines of Colorado does not rest on that side of the Chamber. It depends solely and alone in the hope that a Republican Senate and a Republican President will block the way of a destructive majority in this House. And they will not look in vain. That great man in the White House is big in body, big in mind, and strong in his patriotic purpose to stand for the American workshop and the American wage earner. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, in bringing these bills before the House of Representatives, in showing your hand to the working people of this Republic, you have sounded the death knell of the Democratic Party in the coming November election. [Applause on the Republican side.] You are making votes for the Republican Party in that section of the South where industry and capital is developing its matchless resources, opening its mines, building its factories, and bringing good wages to the laboring man, and a desirable local market for the farmers in prosperous and growing industrial centers. They are watching your votes. Their eyes are upon this House, and when they see you voting to close the iron mills, the zinc mines, the bauxite mines, the iron-ore mines, and turning the money in to Cuba, Sweden, France, China, England, Germany, and old Mexico, the wrath that will await you and your party will be all sufficient in November. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice unusual activity on the part of the Representatives in this body from Colorado in offering amendments to overcome the evil effects of Democratic policy, so that in the RECORD they may stand as being opposed to the bill for which they soon will vote. But let it be understood—

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield just for a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman that the people of Colorado got a bigger jolt from the Republican Party on the silver question than this is going to be.

Mr. MANN. And they showed their resentment, and they will show their resentment again, against the Democratic Party for endeavoring to complete the annihilation of the industries of Colorado which they charged us with commencing. The gentlemen from that State offer amendments to show in the RECORD that they are in favor of increasing the tariff on Colorado industries, and they support their amendments with speeches, with which they will flood the State; but let it be understood by the people of Colorado, who will not be deceived, that the only protection that that State has from the annihila-tion of her industries is the election of a Republican Congress, with Republican Representatives from that State. [Applause

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French]. The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Martin].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. MANN. I see but three Democratic votes for the amendment. I withdraw the demand for the division.

The Clerk read as follows:

55. Pens, metallic, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24, page 17, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, there are in my home city, Camden, N. J., two establishments which manufacture steel pens. One of them—the Esterbrook Co.—is one of the largest establishments of its kind in this country. one of these concerns came to see me a few days ago, and he informed me that the present duty on steel pens represents only about the difference between the wages that are paid abroad and the wages that are paid here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposed rate cuts that duty right in two, and inasmuch as these manufacturers of pens have not made large fortunes, according to my information, I am inclined to think that what that gentleman said to me is true. In my opinion, if the duty is fixed at 25 per cent, as is proposed in this bill, it will not only injure the industry, but will injuriously affect the workingmen with those institutions, and I hope 50 will be inserted in place of 25.

In urging this amendment, Mr. Chairman, that the word "twenty-five" be stricken out and the word "fifty" inserted in lieu thereof—that is, in proposing that the rate of duty on steel and metallic pens other than gold be 50 per cent ad vasteel and metallic pens other than gold be 50 per cent ad valorem instead of 25 per cent, as provided in the bill—I do so more to conform to the phraseology of the bill, in the hope that my amendment may be accepted by the committee, than in asking for a duty that will be adequately protective, because it is a fact, Mr. Chairman, that the peculiarities of this business are such that a specific duty is necessary for the adequate protection required to equalize the cost of production in this protection required to equalize the cost of production in this country and abroad. The present duty is a specific duty of 12 cents per gross on steel and metallic pens other than gold pens, and this duty was fixed after a careful investigation of the steel-pen industry here and abroad, so as to nearly equalize the extra cost of labor and material in this country as compared with the cost of labor and material in England and on the Continent of Europe.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of the lesser, though not the least important, of our many industries. In the production of steel pens there is invested a capital of nearly $1,000,000, and more than 1,000 employees are engaged at good wages. Some 20 processes are necessary in the manufacture of steel pens, and seven-tenths of the cost of production goes to labor. The wages we pay in this country are more than double those paid abroad for the same work, and should the reduction which is proposed in this bill become the rate of duty it would most seriously affect, if not entirely destroy and throw into foreign hands, the major portion of this business, with no resulting benefit to the consumers of pens, and it would at the same time materially decrease or entirely take away the wages of all those employed in making pens.

There is no item in this bill, Mr. Chairman, that so clearly emphasizes and illustrates the apparent longings of our Democratic friends to entirely destroy an American industry without any compensating advantage whatsoever to the American people. There has been no demand from any source for a decrease of the duty on steel pens, and the only persons who would benefit by the reduction proposed are the foreign manufacturers or the importers in this country engaged in the sale of foreign-made

Mr. Chairman, there is no monopoly of this industry, nor has the industry any trust features. There is the keenest competi-tion amongst the several manufacturers, and the price at which a single pen, or a dozen, or a gross can be purchased is so inconsiderable that it is in no way burdensome upon any consumer. Furthermore, the steel that is used in the manufacture of pens is not made in this country, but has to be imported and a liberal duty paid thereon.

It becomes a question, then, Mr. Chairman, whether we shall continue this industry in this country or whether we shall destroy it. Whether this little article of universal use, made in such perfection and sold at an almost infinitesimal price, shall in its manufacture give employment to a thousand or more wellpaid American laborers or shall it be transplanted to England or to the Continent of Europe with the result that the only possible beneficiaries in this country will be the importers into whose pockets a few dollars will be emptied?

But, Mr. Chairman, the manufacture of steel pens is by no means the only industry in the city, the district, and the State which I have the honor to represent, and I shall take this opportunity to briefly call attention to the importance of our other industries, and to insist that they, as well as the steel-pen industry, shall continue to have such protection as is adequate to equalize the difference between the cost of production in this country and abroad.

Thirty years ago the value of the manufactured products of Camden amounted to a little over $7,000,000. In 10 years this was increased to over $21,000,000. There was no material increase during the next decade, the decade in which the Wilson-Gorman law was written on the statutes, and under which, for three or four years, our industries suffered keenly, our mills and factories were closed, and our laborers were idle or working half time at a low rate of wages. In 1905, however, the industries of the principal city in my district had increased to over $33,000,000, and 5 years later, according to the census of 1910, we had an annual output of over $50,000,000, representing an invested capital of about the same amount. Over 20,000 people are employed at good wages in our iron mills, in our pottery plants, in our woolen mills, in making soups, and candy, and chemicals, oilcloth, embroidery, laces, shoes, corks, talking machines, and a thousand and one other articles, from the little steel pen I have talked about to the great battleships and merchandise-bearing vessels which can be found in every part of the world.

Perhaps a quarter of a million dollars are paid weekly in wages to the laborers employed in the industries of Camden and it will not be amiss for me to make a brief comparison with the wages of the same class of labor employed abroad. In a recent report from our consul general in London, giving the figures as far as compiled from the inquiry of the British Board of Trade into the earnings and hours of labor in the various industries in the United Kingdom, I find that the weekly earnings in Great Britain in the products covered by the bill we are now discussing run from $5.97 to $8.85, the average being about $7, or somewhat more than $1 per day, and these industries, be it understood, employ expert or skilled workmen. Every one of these industries is found in my district, and a comparison of wages will show that the wages paid in Camden, N. J., are double, and in many instances treble, those that are paid for the same class of work in Great Britain, and not only that, but the people of Great Britain are required to work from 53 to 55 hours a week, or almost an entire day longer than is required of our people in Camden.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the steel-pen industry and the entire metal industry of Camden is to be destroyed, if the woolen industry and the chemical industry and the various productions I have named are to come in competition with foreign productions, then, I ask you, What is going to become of this $250,000 weekly paid in wages? What advantage will there be to those 20,000 workers in Camden or to the 400,000 in New Jersey or the 8,000,000 in the United States employed in our mills and factories? Why, the people of my city have $20,000,000 deposits in the saving banks and those savings would have to go when the weekly earnings cease. We have in my city 31 building and loan associations, with 10,000 stockholders and assets of over $4,000,000. There are no tenements in the whole city of Camden. Our hitherto well-employed and well-paid people have been buying their homes and paying for them. What will become of them when the Democratic Party destroys the industries of the city and of the State and of the whole country?

Under the adequate protection given our industries the manufactures of the State of New Jersey during the last decade have increased 100 per cent, amounting now to $1,250,000,000 annually, and most of this, Mr. Chairman, goes to the laborers of the State in wages in one form or another. Suppose these wages are cut off, what, then, becomes of the agricultural opportunities of the State? New Jersey is by no means a farming State, and yet last year it produced over 1,500,000 bushels of oats, 10,000,000 bushels of corn, and 2,000,000 bushels of wheat, and our farmers reaped a profitable livelihood from truck sold in the larger cities and towns to well-paid laborers who have learned to enjoy and to demand three square meals a day.

I am proud of the industries of our district and State, Mr. Chairman, as my colleagues here are proud of the industries of their districts and States, and yet if we write upon our statutes the reduction of duties and the abolition of duties as framed in this so-called metal bill, or as framed in the bills which passed this House at the extra session and which President Taft in is good judgment so wisely vetoed, then, I say, our thousands of mills and factories must be closed and the millions of well-paid laborers must become idle or confront the only alternative of accepting wages such as are paid to their competitors abroad, which are not one-half, and in some instances not one-third, as much as those paid in similar industries in this country.

I began my plea, Mr. Chairman, for adequate protection in one of the smaller industries. I make the same plea for all of the industries of my district, for all of the industries of my State, and for all of the industries of the entire Nation. make the same plea, not only for our manufacturers but for those engaged in agriculture, in forestry, in fisheries, and in the mines. I make this plea in order that we may continue our high scale of living in this country, that we may continue our great educational institutions, that our workingmen may properly house, feed, and clothe their families, and that we may continue to enjoy the advantages and blessings which have come to the American people largely, if not wholly, because of the adequate protection which the Republican Party has given our labor and our industries during the half century of its control of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Browning] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party has been the medium through which a few industrial and financial pirates have been able to create a system by which the producers of the wealth of this rich country have been robbed and plundered of what they produced. [Applause on the Demo-

The protective tariff argument has been a delusion and a snare; admittedly so, by the Republicans themselves, an argument for campaign purposes only. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Hundreds of thousands of hard-working people, who work long hours, are living in hovels, and their work-worn wives and ragged children convince them that they are not sharing the prosperity boasted of by the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The conditions of the working people in the steel industry, in mining, and other large industries clearly prove that the men who delve in the bowels of the earth and work at other hard and hazardous occupations do not get a fair proportion of the great wealth which they are risking their health, their limbs.

and their lives to produce.

Even now, while we are considering this measure, thousands of men, women, and children are surging through the streets of one of the great industrial centers of the New England States, asking that their condition in life be bettered, that the little stipend that is doled out to them from time to time by the corporations for their work be increased, but at every move they make there stands confronting them the bayonets of the National Guard of their State.

If the subdued and angry cries of that motley throng could penetrate this Chamber, 45 per cent of them could not be understood by the Members of this House.

Contrast their condition with that of the owners of the mills, who live in luxury and meet in their offices in New York or Boston, and by agreement among themselves fix the prices of the products of the mills high enough to enable them to pay dividends upon millions of dollars that have never been invested, or if invested at one time for machinery, those machines have long gone out of existence and labor can no longer use them to make the wealth that, when disposed of, goes to pay the interest on this vast amount of money thus expended.

While it is true that the woolen goods are not included in this schedule, yet it is true that it is one of those highly pro-tected industries that we have heard so much about in this Chamber.

But let us turn from the woolen workers to the great steel industry, which is an industry now under consideration. According to the best information that can be procured, the United Steel Corporation in the past 10 years has paid more than $60,000,000 in dividends on stocks that were pure water, spurious capital. By a statement of Judge Gary we learn that they have approximately 200,000 men in their employment; if that be true, then this great corporation, for the purpose of paying this exorbitant dividend, has taken more than $300 each year for the past 10 years from each of the toilers and turned it over to the owners of the watered stock.

Going to their hovels, we find them sleeping in their squalor, as many as a dozen in one room, living and working under conditions of stress and oppression the like of which has never been known except in ancient days; and now these gentlemen are asking us to maintain a tariff for the protection of the American wage earners. We are asked to maintain a tariff, not for the protection of the American wage earners, but for the owners of the watered stocks. They, and they alone, are the ones who receive the protection, and are themselves reaping the benefit that comes from keeping out the products of the mills of other countries because they have absolute free trade The ports are closed to the products of other mills in labor. coming from other shores, making this Nation one vast closed shop for the mill owners and their product, but one great open shop for the admission of the labor that they employ to work their mills.

They now tell us that this is for the protection of American labor, and yet 60 per cent of the toilers in these mills are unnaturalized foreigners, working under conditions and for wages that no American family can live on. And yet they speak of protecting American labor.

These foreigners have been induced to come here by the great steamship companies and by the great employment bureaus, and while possibly only a few of them have come in direct violation of the alien contract law, yet they have been brought here in such a way that it must be recognized that it is an evasion of that law. Not being able to understand our language, not knowing the conditions that exist in America, and many of them coming from the farms of the European countries and not being familiar with American methods of farming, there is only one place left for them, and that is the mills or the mines or construction work of the simplest kind, where brawn and not skill is required; and they are there exploited by these pirates of industry and their lives and limbs are sacrificed for the payment of dividends on fictitious capital.

While the Democratic majority of this House is endeavoring to place laws upon the statute books of this Nation to give the people relief from the burdens placed upon them by the Republican Party, the cry goes up from that side of this Chamber, "You will disturb business." The interests of honest business and working people lie together and can not be separated. It is my purpose to exercise my influence to protect honest, legitimate business from the financial and industrial pirates that are preying upon and sucking the lifeblood out of it.

I have had a wide experience as a workman, working at one of the hardest and most hazardous occupations that there isbridge and structural ironwork. It is a common saying by the men who work at the trade that "we do not die, we get killed," and the large number of accidents resulting in death bears out that statement.

In 1889, about the time that I began working on bridge construction, men were receiving an average of $2 a day for 10 hours' work. If a man was injured by accident, resulting in his becoming a permanent cripple, he often became the subject of some charitable institution; if by accident he fell, resulting in his death, if he was not lost in the deep waters of some river over which the bridge spanned, he was often buried in the potter's field.

There was no organization at that time, outside of possibly Chicago and New York, which would give the ironworkers protection in the way of death or accident benefits. But when the organization was affected the wages of the structural ironworker in a short period of time increased from an average of $2 a day to an average of $4 a day; and when anyone was injured the officers of the union looked after the immediate needs for relief, and the organization paid the expense; and when death resulted from accident or otherwise the organization, through its officers, gave a decent burial; and through this organization and unity of action, and not from the result of any tariff or other legislation, the ironworker improved his condition by increasing his wages 100 per cent and reducing the hours from 10 to 8.

I was active for years to secure the perfection of this organization that it might secure greater results for the benefit of the iron workers—the men who spanned the great rivers and made our great commerce possible—and almost, without exception, I found those who had their agents in the halls of our national legislative body to secure a high tariff invariably using every effort at their command to destroy the usefulness of the organization and to prevent the workingman from securing better wages and better conditions, clearly demonstrating that their arguments for a high tariff on the grounds of protection to American workingmen and to create more satisfactory, conditions to American citizens as a whole was made for the purpose of deceiving and deluding the voters of the country. But, it will be remembered, that when in the recent campaign the managers of the Republican Party saw the general awakening among the people and came to the conclusion that they could no longer mislead them by that old, threadbare-worn argument, they pledged a tariff revision, admitting that the tariff had created monopolies, which resulted in unnatural high prices being collected as a tribute from the consumer. They learned that they had to practice some other deception, and in campaign speeches promised tariff reform in the way of a reduction, but argued that it should be made by those who believed in a protective tariff or by the agents of the tariff beneficiaries, which plan of course was clear to men of experience and intelligence that it would not be done. The people again permitted themselves to be deceived and voted the Republican ticket, believing that they would carry out their promise.

By the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich bill, and the comment on it by the newspapers and the magazines of the country, the people learned that they had again been deceived by the Republican Party, which was in the control of plutocracy, and that they had to continue to pay the penalty in the way of a high tariff, collected for the benefit of the privileged classes or what Thomas W. Lawson properly named "the system," which is the power of a few men to take the wealth of the Nation produced by the people.

This is the condition that the gentlemen of the other side of the House boast of. If they can take any pleasure from the belief that they can continue to deceive the people they may do so, but I want to say that I have sufficient confidence in the intelligence and patriotism of the people of this country to believe that they are going to be loyal to themselves and loyal to the principles of Jefferson and Lincoln, and that they will unite from Maine to California to free themselves from the system which has fastened the shackles of industrial slavery

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, WILLIAM B. WILSON, who has so ably and forcefully stated the fact that the working people have not, will not, and can not receive benefits from a high tariff or from the so-called protective tariff, which, by the way, does protect the financial and commercial pirates in fastening the shackles of slavery on the producers of the wealth of this country [applause on the Democratic side] knows whereof he speaks. It is well for us to know, it is well for this House to know, and it is well for the people to know something about the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to know who he is. He is a man who from boyhood days has worked as a miner, and has associated with and worked with the men who created and developed the great natural resources of this country, a man whose practical experience in life has been such that he knows something about the needs of the working people [applause on the Democratic side] and is well qualified to say and to know that the Republican Party has practiced that deception and deceived and coerced the working men into voting against their own interests these many years. [Applause on the Democratic side. I

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether some arrangement can not be made by which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] may be heard?

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not ask for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Farr] wanted five minutes' time.

Mr. PALMER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARE] be allowed that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph be closed in five minutes, and that his colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] be recognized for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlemen from Colorado—the three Democratic Representatives of that State—have given us a concrete instance of the fact that the tariff does help labor, because they candidly state that if the provisions of this measure go into effect 25 per cent of their mines will be closed down, that labor to that extent will be directly affected, and the labor in all the other mines of that State injured.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Buchanan] talks about Pennsylvania. My friends, Pennsylvania is a monument to the system of protection. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman talks about the coal regions. No better class of people, no people better fed, better housed, better in every sense of civilization, can be found anywhere than the mining people of the anthracite-coal region, which I have the honor, in part, to represent. And I may say the same thing as regards the soft-coal regions of the western part of the State.

Now, I am not in favor of this measure, because I do not believe it has been scientifically drawn.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], whom I esteem highly, and who is a perfectly capable gentleman, said frankly that he was not an expert on these questions. He did not profess to be, and he candidly stated that he had only a general knowledge of the subject. Yet, gentlemen. he is one of a subcommittee of three who prepared this bill which will affect industries in which 1,100,000 people are employed. This bill affects the nut and bolt works in Scranton, which employ nearly a thousand people at high wages. The manager of that concern told me within two or three weeks that they have had very hard sledding for the last two or three years, and I know that the considerable reduction in this measure in the tariff rates on their products will affect them very materially. It will also injure an axle works in Scranton, and instead of lowering the rate, as this measure does, there ought to be an increase for their benefit. I know that that industry has not paid a dividend, unless it has done so within a year.

I do not want to charge it up against the Democratic Party, but gentlemen on the other side have repeatedly cast aspersions on the foreigner. I never knew before coming to this Congress that to be a foreigner was to be a criminal. My good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] was born in Scotland. I thank God this country was broad enough to let my father come here. [Applause.] I thank God that he was willing that come here, anxious and ambitious to get the opportunities that a splendid country like this afford, so that I might be born here and enjoy those opportunities also. I want to ask you gentlemen on the other side how could we run our great industries in this country without the foreign people?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Employ Americans.

Mr. FARR. You could not do it. We could not run our hard coal mines where men of skill are required. You could not run your soft coal mines. You could not run to the necessary capacity the great industries of this country without them.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Not and pay them a dollar a day.

Mr. FARR. You could not run your textile industries in your district, employing the highest skilled labor, without foreign labor.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If the gentleman will yield, I will say to him that you can not employ American workingmen to work seven days a week for a dollar a day.

Mr. FARR. They do not do it, I want to tell the gentleman; and I base my statement on an investigation made by the London Board of Trade, commented on at length by the London Times, which proved that we pay nearly two and one-half times the wages to the working people of this country that are paid in England for similar work. I am a printer by trade..

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FARR. I should like two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this paragraph.

Mr. FARR. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed by order of the committee.

Mr. PALMER. I call for a vote. Mr. FARR. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will not He has occupied a great deal of time on this floor object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] is a practical printer, and he wants to talk to the Members of this House, constituted very largely of lawyers, about his own business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARE] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I am a printer by trade. typer on a London newspaper gets nine and a half dollars a week. In the city of New York he gets from $27 to $32 a week. [Applause on the Republican side.] In my own city of 130,000 people he gets $23 a week.

Mr. ADAIR. That is unlucky.

Mr. FARR. I want to say that I am a member of organized The labor of England, if anything, is better organized than in America. [Applause on the Republican side.] printer in France gets 10 cents an hour. The skilled mechanic in an automobile factory in that country gets 10 to 12 cents an hour. In this country he gets 30 to 60 cents an hour, and all along the line, my friends, is evidence of the fact that the system of protection means high wages and more employment. plause on the Republican side.]

It is a marvel to me, with all these millions coming from foreign countries, that we have been able to give them employment at the highest wages paid any people in the world; and they are filling our banks with their deposits, building their own homes, and becoming capitalists in this country. What better tribute to the American system of protection? Why, my friends, did my father and thousands of other fathers come here, except that they knew that they could better their condition? I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson], who is a leader of labor, that he does not treat the foreigners in his State and in his district properly when he talks slightingly of them, because they were loyal men in the cause of labor in the strikes that settled a good many serious questions for the betterment of humanity and helped him to a position of promi-

Again, I want to say to you gentlemen who speak about this question so slightingly-which I charge to you individually on that side, not as a party-that you want to begin to study these statistics and then ask yourselves if any great industry in this country can be run without foreign labor.

And you in the South who are looking to a glorious future, which is your right, must be regenerated by that very infusion of foreign blood in your industrial life in order to attain your true greatness. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You will never rise to greatness and power without it. There can be no serious reflection made against the foreigner. This is a foreign-made country. The miners of my community come from England, Ireland, Wales, Germany, and other coun-They are a good, substantial, earnest, and conscientious people, and their sons and daughters occupy the highest positions there. Many of the men who have made names for themselves in the professions, business, and great wealth out of coal mining in our community were and are foreign-born people.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield? I am in sympathy with all that he says as to foreigners, but does not the gentleman think that we ought to have a chance to get some of the foreign-made goods with less shoddy in them than we get at

Mr. FARR. We use less shoddy in our goods than England does. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want the wheels of this country to go round for the benefit of the people of this country, and not the wheels of England, France, and Germany, at our expense and to the injury of our industries and labor. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want the mines of Colorado to go on; I want the people to get employment, whether they be foreign or American born.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FARR. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. If the foreigners are such good men as the gentleman represents, why do they make shoddy goods, as the gentleman alleges?

Mr. FARR. Because they are so poorly paid. I have stated that we pay nearly two and a half times the wages that are paid in similar trades in England and still more than that compared with wages paid in other countries in Europe.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the report of the Bureau of Corporations that refers to wages paid in Pennsylvania. I find one of the largest class is that class of men who are paid not more than 12 to 14 cents an hour.

Mr. FARR. Where is that?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. In the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FARR. What place? Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The employees of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. FARR. I do not know any that get that, but if true, these men could not get half those wages at the same work in any country across the ocean.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think that 10 cents an hour is two and a half times as much as is paid to employees in England?

Mr. FARR. I said our labor is paid nearly two and a half times the wages that similar labor is paid in England.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does the gentleman want to stand for the statement that in England they work for a sum two and a half times less than 10 cents an hour?

Mr. FARR. They work for two and one-half times less for the same kind of work done.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks that in any civilized country in the world they work 12 hours a day and 7 days a week for $1.20 a day?

Yes. Mr. FARR.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Where?

Mr. FARR. And for less.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Where? Mr. FARR. I do not uphold that system, the gentleman will

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman if he can name a civilized country in the world where men work 7 days a week 12 hours a day for $1.20 a day?

Mr. FARR. Yes; and I will give the gentleman an instance. In Italy a stonemason works from 10 to 12 hours a day for 80 cents a day, and in my town he gets from $3 to $4 a day for 8 hours. Many other instances in various other countries can be

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I did not say from 10 to 12 hours a day. I said 12 hours a day, 7 days in the week.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. He did not say that. If he chooses to say it, I wish he would-and neither does the gentleman from Kansas say it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the committee will be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

56. Penholder tips, penholders and parts thereof, gold pens, fountain pens, and stylographic pens; combination penholders, comprising penholder, pencil, rubber eraser, automatic stamp, or other attachment, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope that no gentleman on this floor will misunderstand my position with regard to foreign labor employed in this country. In no statement that I have made upon this floor have I ever cast any reflection of any kind or character upon foreign workmen employed in this country, but what I have said and what I repeat is this, that, irrespective of the industrial or moral qualities of foreign workmen, we have practically free trade in labor, and that the American workman has to compete with free trade in labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of the conditions in the region that he comes from.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Not at present. The gentle-man speaks of conditions in the part of Pennsylvania that he comes from, the anthracite coal regions, and he knows that anthracite coal is on the free list now and has been for some time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He also knows that the conditions under which the anthracite miners work are conditions that are somewhat similar to the conditions that exist in the bituminous mines, where we have a protective tariff. The gentleman also knows that in the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania 51 per cent of the men employed are foreignspeaking people, not including Germans and French, and that in the bituminous regions of Pennsylvania there are 62 per cent of those who are employed in the mines that are foreignspeaking people, and those men have come in droves, not only into the mining regions of Pennsylvania, but into the steel and iron producing regions of Pennsylvania, in competition with American workmen, cheapening the wages, except where they have been forced up by a powerful labor organization. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly. Mr. FARR. I said that the gentleman spoke slightingly of foreign labor, and does he not?

on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No.
Mr. FARR. I would ask the gentleman this question—
Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have not spoken slightingly of foreign labor, and do not propose to speak slightingly of foreign labor, but I have said that the American workman has been compelled to compete with free trade in labor. [Applause

Mr. FARR. I would ask the gentleman if the wages in the arthracite coal region are not the highest that have ever been paid in mining?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That is true, notwithstanding that there is free trade in anthracite coal, and by virtue of the fact that they have had a labor organization to force the conditions.

Mr. FARR. I admit that largely organized labor has had something to do with that, but do we need a tariff on hard coal? Is it not a natural monopoly?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Not necessarily, because there is anthracite coal produced, as the gentleman knows, in Wales. Mr. FARR. Oh, I mean in America. about the United States. We are now talking WILSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want protection in Pennsylvania-

Mr. FARR. We are not asking for protection.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania (continuing). To protect you from some other part of the United States? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The question of protection on anthracite coal Mr. FARR. has not been raised except by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson]. We do not need any protection on it.

natural monopoly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired,

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] whether there was any place in the world where men worked every day in the week for 12 hours a day at less than a dollar a day, and I say to the gentleman from New Jersey that competing with the principal industry of his own town, the silk industry, in Japan and China there are thousands of men and women who work 14 and 15 hours a day for seven days in the week for as low as 15 cents a day.

The industries of the Orient are developing and growing very rapidly. Along the Woosung River, from its mouth to Shanghai in China, there are upward of 30 cotton mills that work their employees as high as 15 hours a day every day in the week at 10 cents a day, many of them, and there is not an employee in the factories, unless it be a foreman, who gets as high as a The time will come when we will have to build up a pretty high tariff wall against that kind of competition.

The gentlemen from the South, with their cotton industry growing and developing so rapidly, will have much to fear from the Orient as the cotton industries of that section of the world are developed. You can not compete with labor that works for as low as 8, 10, and 20 cents a day. Do you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle expect the American workingman to compete with that kind of labor?

Now, the same is equally true in the Orient with respect to Japan has great coal fields. Any man who has ever visited the Orient and has seen how the Japanese toilers load the liners which come to the ports of Nagasaki and Yokohama will realize how impossible it is for the American workman to compete with that kind of labor. I simply say to the gentleman from New Jersey that his people, the people whom he represents on the floor of this House, can never stand the competition with the Orient unless there is a high protective duty on the silk which competes with that which is manufactured in Paterson, N. J. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate Japan on being added to the list of civilized nations by the gentleman from California-

Well, the gentleman will not deny that Japan Mr. KAHN.

Mr. KAHN. Well, the gentleman will not deny that Japan is a highly civilized country, will he?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will take the gentleman's statement for that; he perhaps is more familiar with the Japanese than I am. I will say to him that so far as competition with Japan is concerned that the city of Paterson, and I know something about the silk business, does not fear that competition half as much as it fears the competition of the cheap labor in the highly protected State of Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will not yield now. I want to ask one question just now.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will not answer a question right now, but I will yield later.

Mr. FOCHT. I know you will not yield. I am sure the gentleman can not answer this one.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I have seen little girls, little children, working in the mills of Pennsylvania for $3 a week at Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I have seen little girls, little children, working in the mills of Pennsylvania for $3 a week at work which under the union scale in the city of Paterson would on the Republican side.] Of course, manufactured products be compensated for at the rate of $21 a week. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the citizens of Paterson have been called upon to meet that competition, and are meeting it now. Your protection theory has driven the manufacturers of silk into every corner of this country where they can use the by-product of the workman's family, the little girls who could not find employment in other capacities, but who can handle the fine fibers of silk, and the working people of the city of Paterson are asked to compete with that sort of competition. plause on the Democratic side. 1 Not only that, but we did our best to secure by legislation fair labor conditions in the State of New Jersey, but the manufacturers, fleeing from this high standard we set up, went to the friendly and boss-ridden State of Pennsylvania, where they could pay their labor less, where they could hire sheriffs to shoot down strikers upon the high roads, where they could work their own sweet will upon these people who dared to rise and ask for a slight share of this money which you wrung from the balance of the people in the name of labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Labor has been charged with lots of things. The last President of the United States never mentioned a trust that he did not in the same breath mention a labor organization. could not see the difference between the American Federation of Labor, an organization of men, and the United States Steel Corporation, an organization of dollars. The present President of the United States enjoined them when they tried to get their share of this protection which you have levied in their name. If you want to help them, pass laws such as the countries you criticize have passed; pass a compensation act such as England has passed. Pass a law which will permit laboring men to organize—make them free from the drastic provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. Give them a chance to get some of the money that you are wringing from the people of this country in the name of labor and putting in your own pockets. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. FOCHT, and Mr. BERGER

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger] how much time he desires. Mr. BERGER. Five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there are three gentlemen who want five minutes each. I move to close the debate on this paragraph in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in 15 minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] 5 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] 5 minutes. minutes, and his colleague [Mr. Focht] 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary for me to repeat the old truism that high tariff simply protects the manu-It means that the Nation is paying the manufacturer a bonus for investing his money. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is always free trade in labor. The workingman's labor is bought in the open market from the lowest seller. I also wish to say that it is only in our country that the manufacturers claim they want a protective tariff in order to protect labor. In Germany there is also a high protective tariff. manufacturers of Germany, however, do not claim that they want a protective tariff for the workingmen. They honestly say they want it to protect their own profits. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The same is true in France. The manufacturers of France do not claim that they want protection for their workingmen, but that they want it for themselves. That is fair and square. And if they have the power to get it, it is all right. Agricultural countries, as a rule, subsidize manufacturers in order to create factories.

In this country, about some 30 years ago, after the infant industries had become giants, the politicians in Pennsylvania began to claim that the tariff was going to protect labor.

When I got to Milwaukee, some 30 years ago, I remember they paid the workmen in the rolling mills as high as $10 to $15 a day. Then the employers introduced new machinery and new processes, and now, under the blessings of protection, the protective tariff, the workmen get $1.75 to $2 a day for similar work. The Republican protection theory was simply invented because the workmen have votes. So much for this side of the House.

Now to my friends, the Democrats. [Laughter.] While I am absolutely against the high tariff, because it is simply a means of exploitation-it hits the poor man as a consumer, and the would be cheaper. One could probably get a suit of clothes like the one I have on for $10. But a Chinaman would make it, or a Japanese would make it, or a Hindoo would make it. [Applause on the Republican side.] Our people would be without work. We would be very much in the position of a gentleman from Texas who said he remembered the time when he could buy a county in Texas for a pair of boots. When asked why he did not buy the county, he replied that he did not have the boots. [Laughter and applause.] That would be the condition of the working class.

We have built entire industries upon the tariff. not stand a quick and total reduction. That would unsettle conditions, close workshops, and deprive thousands of wage earners of their jobs. As far as the tariff question is concerned, the American working class is between the devil and the deep blue sea. Here is the Republican devil and there is the Democratic deep blue sen. [Laughter.] And, gentlemen, the rock of rescue is socialism, when every person will own his job and get the full value of the product of his or her labor. But I can not explain that to-night.

I only want to add that until society can find another job for laborers in a dying industry a radical or sudden change in the tariff is disastrous.

I want to say something about high wages in our country. I have the figures for 1905. The following are the high wages of have the figures for 1905. The following are the high wages of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania boasts. The average weekly earnings for our country in 1905 is $11.15 for male adult workmen. There are quite a number of them, namely, 132,064, who get less than $3 a week. These are Republican figures and not Socialist figures. The average wage of adult females in 1905 was $6.17. The average for children under 16 in 1905 was $3.46. The number of women at work in our blessed country, here in 1905 was $219,2907 blessed country here in 1905 was 5,319,397.

I have not the figures for the number of women at work in 1910, but in 1905, 71 per cent earned less than $3, 10.9 per cent less than $4, and 15.1 per cent less than $5. Just imagine these despicable wages under the blessings of a Republican tariff!

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

We have the figures for 216,262 establishments. Now, I admit that the wages are somewhat better here than they are in Germany or in England [applause on the Republican side], but it can not be shown that the tariff is responsible for this. recently we had colonial conditions in our country. And it should be remembered that in Germany and in England the country takes care of the workingmen in their old age. The workingmen there get a pension. It may be only $1.25, or $2, or $2.50, as it is in Australia. But there the workingman is cared for in his old age; the workingman is also cared for in some countries when out of work; the workingman is cared for when he is sick. How about our country? What employer cares whether his workingman is sick? Nor does the Government help him any. Our legislative bodies, including Congress, have done less for the workingman than the legislatures of any other civilized country on earth. There can be no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. there objection?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

Mr. BERGER. I do not bother this House much, and I would be glad to conclude in two minutes.

he CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Moreover, gentlemen, we are on the eve of the most tremendous industrial crisis that this country has ever seen. Under capitalism we get these crises about every 20 years. We had the last one in 1893. They are caused because the workingmen can not under the present system get the full value of their products. And since their numerical strength makes them the chief consumers of a nation there is a so-called overproduction all the time. The next crisis will come in the year 1913 just as sure as this earth goes round on its axis. However, if you elect a Democratic President and if you tinker with the tariff you might get it about six months sooner. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

There is no doubt in the world but that we are going to have a panic, because no matter how much or how little the workers produce they create more than they can buy back with their There is no escape from it under the capitalist system. I would be glad to explain our Socialists' theory of wages and capital, but I have not time to-night.

Both of the big parties are playing politics on this great question of the employment of workers. [Laughter.] It is a very serious thing. All I can do is to watch, with a grim smile, how both sides of this Chamber play the game. Yet upon such im-portant questions we should drop politics. We ought to work as a unit and consider the propositions solely on their merits, and in no other way.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BERGER. With pleasure.

Mr. ADAIR. Is it not true that the gentleman from Wisconsin has voted with this side of the House on practically every proposition since he has been a Member of this House?

Mr. BERGER. Oh, no; not on every proposition.

Mr. ADAIR. On practically every one?

Mr. BERGER. No, Mr. Chairman. But I have voted and I shall vote for every reduction that is proposed in this tariff, unless I can be shown that workingmen get their share. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] But the Democrats have no panacea for any of the ills which afflict the country.

Mr. HARDY. They are all right, so far as they go, the gentleman means?

Mr. BERGER. Well, they are just a little more right on this question than are the gentlemen over here. [Laughter.]

On the other hand, I can see the time when my neighbors may be more nearly right than the other side. But only the Socialists are always right on the question of bread and butter for the working class.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I thank you.

Mr. JAMES. How is the gentleman going to vote on this

I am going to vote with the Democrats, because they are taking off some of the duty on iron and steel, and because the working class does not get any benefit from the tariff as it is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman argue in this House on his Socialistic policies?

Mr. BERGER. I do not understand the gentleman's question. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to agree that there can not be a perfect and scientific tariff measure that will bring its equal reward to the manufacturer and the laborer when, on the one hand, the thing which the laborer makes is protected and, on the other hand, the hands that make it are not. But how conditions are to be equalized by this Democratic method without breaking down both manufacturer and laborer is beyond my comprehension. Therefore, as to that point I so far agree with my friend from New-Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and I hope he will keep pace with his utterance here to-night and vote for the bill restricting immigration which I introduced in this Hall last week.

I want to say to him, however, that a gentleman of his distinction, that a gentleman of his eminence, should have, but evidently has not, made careful and diligent research before giving utterance to sentiments on this floor such as he expressed in his impassioned speech a moment ago. I want to say that I never heard anything uttered quite so absurd, anything quite so far from the truth, as his declaration in regard to child labor in Pennsylvania. I am ashamed of his ignorance [laughter on the Republican side], for it is a fact well known all over this country that Pennsylvania has the most stringent laws with respect to child labor of any State in the Union.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Pennsylvania puts free books into the hands of her children and sends them to the best free schools in the world and does not permit them to work in factories; Pennsylvania is the pioneer in election-reform laws, in the inauguration of a modern system of taxation, in caring for her unfortunate, in policing the State; stands first for sanitary regulations under a great medical council; and is now building highways which, for method of construction and extent of mileage, when completed, will make the Roman roads of the Cæsars, so famed during the centuries, look cheap and insignificant in comparison.

Furthermore, is it not flagrantly inconsistent that my friend, in the face of his screaming tirade against Pennsylvania, should vote against an amendment offered here to-day to perfect this bill so that it might have somewhat the form and shape of both the Dingley and Payne bills, to prevent the importation either of child labor or of contract labor, or products not manufac-tured under an eight-hour law? The gentleman's statement is probably no more ridiculous than was that of the distinguished gentleman from Monroe County, one of the leaders of the Democratic side, when he said this morning that out of a $300,000 capital the Bethlehem Steel Co., under the direction of Mr. Schwab, had inflated or accumulated in a few years capital amounting to $15,000,000, saying nothing about the additions and improvements made.

In discussing the question of labor, since Pennsylvania is assailed, I want to say to you that in Pennsylvania nearly every great corporation has a pension system of its own.

I do not defend these corporations as being purely philanthropic institutions, but they have the humanity to maintain pension systems for their employees. In that they are led by that greatest of all corporations in all the world, the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. In this noble conception they were followed by the Lehigh and Lackawanna railroad companies, and under those pension systems their employees in old age are retired on two-thirds pay. And I want to say to the great leader of the Democratic Party on the floor of this House, when there is a discussion of any question regarding labor, and he is constrained to taunt Pennsylvania, let him look at his own State of Alabama, and I may say his own district, where I am pre-pared to prove they have convict and contract labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Chairman, I can not allow the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KANN] to go unchallenged. He has made the statement here that Chinese labor can be purchased for 10 cents a day. First I want to say a word about the Japs. I happened at one time to be pretty closely associated with some of the Japs in their own country, and I was compelled to pay 75 sen, which is equivalent to 37½ cents in our money, per hour for the use of a jinrikisha. And I may say that is the prevailing price in Yokorikisha. And I may say that is the prevaning price in low hama, Tokyo, Kyoto, or any of the principal cities of Japan.

Mr. KAHN rose

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I have only a few minutes. I did not interrupt the gentleman from California, and I do not pro-pose to be interrupted now. The gentleman also spoke of the cotton mills along the Woosung River, a distance of 14 miles, where the cotton mills have never paid, for the reason that they never could make cotton goods fit to wear, and the people of China preferred the American goods and paid American prices. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

want to say further that I have been an employer of Chinese labor in a mill that I erected in Tientsin, China, and the lowest wages I paid in that country was $14 silver per month, which was equivalent to about $7.50 or $7 gold in this

Mr. AUSTIN. Seven dollars a month? Mr. DIFENDERFER. Seven dollars a month gold minimum and a maximum $68 per month silver. Now, I am going to tell you why you Republicans contribute to that. When I came to buy the machinery in this country to establish a woolen mill over there I was notified that I could have that machinery to export for 20 per cent less than if I was to build the mill in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side]. I was permitted to build a mill for 20 per cent less on the soil of China than in the United States. I was permitted to employ Chinese labor in a mill there in competition with a mill built upon this side of the ocean, and this tariff of yours contributed to that fact. People live in proportion to the wages they receive. I wish to refer to one fact which shows how this thing works out. While I was in Shanghai, going up one of the principal streets of that city, I noticed a New Home sewing machine in the window of an American, marked at $35 Mexican, which at that time was equivalent to $15.80 in gold.

When we came to question the price of it at the hotel during a tiffin, the man who owned the store came in, and I asked him why it was that he could afford to sell that machine for $15.80 in China while the same machine brought $45 in America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He told the secret of it, saying that that sewing machine was laid down in China with freight paid and bill of lading attached for $8.25. That is one of the reasons why the Chinese can live cheaply, while the American must pay $45 for an American-made machine. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this paragraph, and the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

57. Pins with solid heads, without ornamentation, including hair, safety, hat, bonnet, and shawl pins; any of the foregoing composed wholly of brass, copper, iron, steel, or other base metal, not plated with gold or silver, and not commonly known as jewelry, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There have been times, Mr. Chairman, when I was at a loss to understand the motives actuating gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle, but I can see now why some of them should support this and other Democratic tariff bills. When Democratic Members of Congress purchase machinery at 20 per cent discount in order to employ Chinese labor at Appendix.]

23 cents a day to manufacture woolen goods to come into this country in competition with American goods, I see why they want to take the tariff off of American goods made at an expense of many dollars a day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unantmous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly echo the sentiments just expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] has told us of the conditions that prevail in the mills along the Woo-sung River, as he saw them. The gentleman speaks of these mills manufacturing cotton cloth. The gentleman from Pennsylvania never put his foot inside of a mill in that locality, if he makes that statement. These mills manufacture nothing but cotton yarn. The cotton cloth that is consumed in China is manufactured in the homes on hand looms. There are no great cotton factories in China that manufacture cotton cloth; many of the people buy the yarn from these mills that exist along the Woosung River, and that pay, as I say, as low as 10 cents a day to their laborers, who work as long as 15 hours a day 7 days in the week.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to the jinrikisha men, who get 37½ cents a day.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. They get 37½ cents an hour in gold.

Mr. KAHN. In what part of the country? Mr. DIFENDERFER. In Yokohama.

Mr. KAHN. I have been in Yokohama, and the prevailing prices there were about 15 cents an hour; the prices were displayed very clearly in figures at the jinricksha stands. Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that these fellows occasionally take advantage of strangers?

Mr. KAHN. They could not take advantage of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who put up the mill and got people to work for 23 cents a day. They could not take any advantage of him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from California ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how many there were in the jinricksha? [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. In that country they have a "push man" and a "pull man" whenever they get a passenger as large as the gen-tleman from Pennsylvania. For a passenger of his size they have to have two jinricksha men, and possibly the two get 371 cents an hour. But, be that as it may, the fact has been brought out here by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in the Orient he employed men to work for $7 a month, and his party doubtlessly wants to put the American workmen, some of whom, in many industries, get as much as that a day, upon the level of the oriental who is willing to live on a cup of tea, a little rice, and a bit of dried fish every day.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would not yield to me, but I will yield to him.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I want to say that when I say I employed these men at these figures, I gave you the very lowest wages that were paid, and I want it simply understood now that a Chinaman in a factory of that country will not do one-tenth of what an American will do here.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, if he has been in China, that there is no more industrious, docile, and painstaking mechanic in the world than a Chinaman. He is willing to work, and can work, without sleep or let or hindrance for 18 hours a day, and he does his full measure of a day's work. Kipling said of the Chinese laborer that he is endowed with "a devil-born capacity for doing more work than he ought." We have had him in California, we know what his capabilities are, and we dread and fear him as a competitor to the American laborer.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

61. Zinc in blocks or pigs and zinc dust; in sheets, and old and worn-out zinc fit only to be remanufactured, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Before line 21, page 19, insert: "Tungsten-hearing ore of all kinds, 20 per cent ad valorem."

[Mr. RUCKER of Colorado addressed the committee. See

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado, and more particularly to mingle my tears for a moment with those of my good friends from Colorado, as they contemplate the destruction of the industries of their great State if this bill should become a law. Fortunately for them there is still a Republican Senate, and so the destruction which they so much fear can not come to pass, and beyond the Republican Senate there is a patriotic President. [Applause on the Republican side.] He takes the same view of the protective principle avowed a moment ago by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOB]. The trouble with my good friends from Colorado is that they are on the They should have thought of that wrong side of the aisle. when they became the candidates of a free-trade party.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have only one moment. I should like to yield to the gentleman, and possibly may later. The gentleman from the western slope of Colorado has well said that the mountain west stands for protection, and Colorado not less than the other States of that region. If it were not for the patriotic veto of a Republican President, the great cattle industry of Colorado would now be suffering from the influx of foreign meats and cattle. If it were not for an equally patriotic and courageous veto, the great wool industry of that great Centennial State would be prostrate. If it were not for the fact that the Democratic majority has not yet gotten around to a revision of the sugar schedule, the splendid sugar industry of that State would be threatened with destruction; and as much as my friends from Colorado fear the effect of this bill, what will be their feeling when the great sugar industry of their State is threatened by the bill reducing the duty on sugar which, we understand, is to come from that side

There is not an industry in that great State that is not either based upon or largely dependent for its prosperity upon the protective tariff. Sheep, cattle, sugar, lead, zinc, coal, steel, iron-aye, even the agricultural products of that great State, most of which are fed to cattle and sheep-are dependent for the price which the farmer receives on the prosperity of the cattle and sheep industries, which in turn depend on the protective tariff, and yet the party they represent and the party with which they continue to vote, while they voice their protests, if it has the power, to strike down or seriously injure all of these great industries.

It has been demonstrated within a short time that it is entirely possible to make such a thorough investigation of any tariff subject as to arrive at a conclusion upon which all men will agree as to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. As an example of that we have the splendid report of the Tariff Board on wool, the findings of which no man on either side has yet questioned.

I want to suggest to my friends from Colorado who claim to believe as we do in a protective tariff that will measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, that if they will vote against their party we may force that party to retain the Tariff Board and thus secure the facts upon which we can legislate intelligently upon this and other subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman wish to speak on

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this tungsten amendment, offered by the gentleman from Colorado, in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to close debate on this one amendment in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close de-

I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to yield five minutes to the gentleman, but the zinc paragraph is not up yet and I do not want to consider that paragraph until we get to it.

Mr. MANN. I understood the zinc paragraph was reached.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it has not been reached.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated his amendment was to come in after the zinc paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. It follows the zinc paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was to follow paragraph 61, which was read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will again ask unanimous consent, and will allow the gentleman from Connecticut five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I understand the paragraph is paragraph 61, the zinc paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The present amendment under consideration is offered as an amendment to paragraph 61

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentlement will state it.
Mr. MANN. What was the last paragraph read?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that paragraph 61

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that paragraph 61 has been read, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado is offered as an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman offered his amendment as the zinc paragraph was read, but it seems that he has offered it as a new paragraph, which, of course, passes the zinc paragraph.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman offered it as an amendment to the zinc paragraph.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman— Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent-I see there are four gentlemen standing who, I suppose, desire to speak.

Mr. MURDOCK. Here is another-five.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin wishes to offer an amendment-

Mr. CAMPBELL. And I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. And I wish to speak on that paragraph. I have not had a chance yet.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 20

Mr. MANN. There are some gentlemen who wish to be heard who can not be heard in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will not do that. There are gentlemen here who wish to be heard on this paragraph. If the gentleman Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to do so, but we have got to get through with this bill to-night.

A Member. Why have we?

Mr. MANN. We are all in an amiable frame of mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if he will agree to 30 minutes' debate I will consent to that.

Mr. MANN. If those who are to talk are specified, that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not only to speak for myself but for gentlemen on that side of the House as well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield 20 minutes of that time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and 10 minutes to this side of the House.

Mr. MANN. We have six men over here who wish to talk. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will let you divide the time. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph be limited to 30 minutes, 20 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 10 minutes by myself. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks that debate on this paragraph be closed in 30 minutes, 20 minutes of which time is to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and 10 minutes by himself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama was on the amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was talking about the whole pararaph. The debate on the tungsten ore has been finished.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it be in order at the close of the time specified by the gentleman from Alabama to move to strike out the entire paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Any motion is in order at the end of that time. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Chair to submit my request

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph be closed in 30 minutes, 20 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and 10 minutes by himself. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois controls the

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp].

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is an amendment pending relating to the tungsten ore. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mr. MANN] has control of the time now.

Mr. KOPP. I believe I have been recognized, Mr. Chairman. ask to have my amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, after the last word in line 20, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Zinc-bearing ore of all kinds, including calamine, containing less than 10 per cent of zinc, shall be admitted free of duty; containing 10 per cent or more of zinc and less than 20 per cent, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on the zinc contained therein; containing 20 per cent or more of zinc and less than 25 per cent, one-half of 1 cent per pound on the zinc contained therein; containing 20 per cent or more of zinc and less than 25 per cent, one-half of 1 cent per pound on the zinc contained therein: Provided, That on all importations of zinc-bearing ores the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry, and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores at such establishments they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer, designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample, and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entries shall be liquidated thereon, except in case of ores that shall be removed to a bonded warehouse to be refined for exportation as provided by law. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP].

Mr. MANN. Five minutes. Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to reenact the present law with reference to zinc ore. Of course, it is not offered with the thought that it will meet receptive ears on the other side of the aisle, as a party, at least, although I am sure it will meet receptive ears so far as many individuals are concerned.

Throughout this tariff discussion one of the principal arguments that has been advanced as to why the tariff should be cut down on many articles has been that the articles enumerated have been produced by a trust; that those who produce the given articles have a monopoly on that production. Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason for that rule fails with reference to zinc ore. I take it there is not a gentleman within sound of my voice who for one moment will contend that there is any trust controlling the production of zinc ore. The zinc industry is dotted over 22 States in this Union. The zinc miners had no trouble with free ore until a few years ago. It had always been conceded until the year 1905 that there was a tariff on zinc ore under the general metal clause. But in 1905 they began for the first time to open up Mexican mines, and they attempted to bring ore in, claiming the basket-metal clause did not apply to calamine, and a case was made in the State of Louisiana, which was taken to the highest court of the land, and it was there held that the protective tariff under the general clause did not apply to zinc ore. Then for the first time the Mexicans began to import ore, and then for the first time since the first zinc mine opened in the United States of America, our mines began to close down permanently. And I ask, even the Democrats on that side of the House who live in zinc districts, to corroborate me with reference to that statement. Mexican ore came in for two or three years. During that time, in the State which I have the honor to represent in part, a large per cent of all the zinc mines for seven months were absolutely closed.

I live within 16 miles of a great smelter. At that time practically every miner in the district was idle, but at the same time the great smelter was running 24 hours a day; and, standing upon the sidetracks at all times of the day night were Mexican Central cars, hauling ore from Mexico. In the three months of March, April, and May, 1909, while the American miners in Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma, and other States were sitting in their backyards whittling, the great smelters of the land were smelting ore from British Columbia and Mexico.

You may talk what you please about the theory of the protective tariff with reference to iron. I do not pretend to know anything about it. You may talk about it with reference to other American industries, and I know but little about them. But I do know that the miners of my district were practically starring when the big smelters were running 24 hours a day on Mexican ore, and that the conditions were reversed within 40 days after the Payne-Aldrich bill became the law of the land; within that time our mines were in full operation.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, a great deal has been said with reference to foreign labor and the kind of laborers employed in various industries. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] asked why a different view is taken with reference to the product of a foreigner when he is working here and when he is working across the water. The difference is plain. When a foreigner is on his native heath he is a foreigner pure and simple, but when he has become an American citizen, and has forsaken all when he has become an American citizen, and has forsaken all allegiance to king, prince, or potentate, and has sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and, if necessary, give his life's blood in defense of its flag, then he is a different man, and entitled to every protection that any other American citizen deserves. Be that as it may, in the zinc mines of Wisconsin we have very few foreigners. Probably 90 per cent of the lead and zinc miners in my State are native born. are intelligent men, many owning their homes, and all of them educating their children and rearing them to be good, patriotic American citizens. You are asking them to compete with the peon labor of Mexico.

Consul Martin, in his Consular and Trade Reports, issued a couple of years ago, states that the condition of these laborers is deplorable—that they have no homes, as we use the term, that they know nothing of education, and eke out a bare existence. He determined from an examination of the mines there that it cost eight times as much to produce a ton of ore in an American mine as in a Mexican mine. Of course the freight rates to the smelter is much higher on the Mexican ore, but, after all this is taken into consideration, it can be shown conclusively that it costs 1½ cents per pound more to produce ore in the United States than in Mexico. Of course, you who believe that the essential feature of our economic life should be cheapness of products will not be impressed by this statement, but on those of us who believe that the essential feature of our economic life should be employment of all labor, as well as capital, it makes a profound impression.

Mr. Chairman, the zinc miners of my district and of the other districts of this country have experienced within a very few years the full effects of free trade in zinc ore. It is a burning question with them. Perhaps no other industry has so recently had an experience with the practical administration of the doctrine of free trade. They are watching to see what the Democratic Party proposes to do with this great industry; they are watching to see who are voting to annihilate the industry, which means practical starvation to thousands of men, and who will vote to make it one of the prosperous industries of the land.

There are many paragraphs in the present bill which meet with my approval. Many of the products of the Steel Trust, I am convinced, carry a tariff which is higher than it should be, and if the opportunity was given to vote against them, it would be gladly done; but I can not go so far as to prostrate many industries of the land which must have protection simply for the purpose of voting against those which now carry too high rates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP] asks unanimous consent to extend the chairman of the chairman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, and send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwoodl is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Nelson].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] wanted one minute in which to offer an amendment. I yield to him for one minute.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado

RUCKER] is recognized for one minute in which to offer an amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I offer is intended to avert a destructive calamity which threatens to overtake the zinc-mining industry of Colorado. If my amendment is voted down, the provision of the bill as it stands must inevitably result in giving the spiders more room in the shafts in 17 mining camps of Colorado, and it will make more room for the bats and the owls in the shaft houses. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes, I ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] to the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Before line 21, page 19, insert the following:
"Zine-bearing ore of all kinds, including calamine, 50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that is not an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make a point of order against it? Mr. MANN. I will have to, but the gentleman from Colorado can offer it later, at the proper time. Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. My amendment cuts the duty 21

That is all.

NN. I thought it should be a new paragraph. per cent. Tha

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No. It is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Nelson].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to indorse what my able colleague [Mr. Korr] has said, and I ask for the adoption of his amendment. After that shall have been voted upon, I shall offer an amendment for consideration by the House.

I am in favor of this amendment for a number of reasons: First, from the point of view of incidental protection, which my colleague has so well explained in the brief time at his command. The cost of producing ore in Missouri and Wisconsin and of laying it down at the Kansas smelters is at least three times what it would be to bring it from the Mexicon ore mines. In confirmation of what my colleague [Mr. Kopp] has said. I wish to quote from Senator La Follette's speech in the Senate when the Aldrich bill was under consideration:

The duty should be based on the difference in the cost of producing in this country and Mexico. The cost of production in both countries is definitely ascertained. It costs, in round numbers, $35 more per ton to lay down a ton of Wisconsin or Joplin ore at the Kansas smelter than a ton of Mexican ore. The labor cost in a ton of ore in Wisconsin is $24.

But I shall not press this point upon this Democratic House, well knowing that it will not consider this question of incidental protection.

But, on the basis of a revenue tariff, it appears to me that this amendment should be adopted. Before 1905 there was imported from Mexico practically no zinc ore, but during the succeeding three or four years Mexican zinc ore amounted to more than 300,000 tons. Indeed, one of the best-informed authorities on zinc ore has stated that Mexico can produce zinc ore so cheaply and abundantly that under free trade or a low tariff from three to four hundred thousand tons can readily be shipped into this country annually. During the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, the senior Senator from Missouri, Mr. Stone, a man who has been chairman of the Democratic National Committee, advocated a tariff of 1 cent per pound on zinc ore in an able speech, basing his support of that rate largely upon the question of revenue for the Gov-

Again, I am in favor of this amendment as a matter of justice. I consider it neither just, nor equitable, nor righteous to give free zinc ore, the raw material, to the New Jersey Zinc Co., the so-called Zinc Trust, at the expense of the mine workers and the mine owners of the United States. The senior Senator from Missouri is my authority to the fact that the Zinc Trust was exceedingly active during the last Congress in seeking to secure free zinc ore, and this activity was especially manifest in the speeches and votes of the Senators from New Jersey.

For these three reasons-from the point of view of incidental protection, from the point of view of revenue for the Government, and from the point of view of justice to the people interested in this industry-I support the amendment of my colleague [Mr. Kopp], and if that fail I offer an amendment of my own.

Now, passing from consideration of this amendment, I wish to say a few words as to my attitude with reference to this and other tariff bills upon which I have voted.

I expect to vote for this bill as the lesser of two evils. There are a number of things in this bill which I do not favor; but as between this bill and the Aldrich bill there is no choice. However, I wish to protest most earnestly against this un-seemly haste, this show of arbitrary power. Whatever Congress determines to stand for, whether it be a protective principle, a revenue principle, or a free-trade principle in tariff legislation, we should, at least, ascertain the facts that sustain that principle so as to make our laws less the embodiment of blind force and more the expression of principle, so that justice may be done to all interests alike.

I have been a protectionist. I still believe in the protective principle when not perverted or misapplied. My constituents are protectionists. My State has always championed the cause of protections. Indeed, for years before the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill the opposing party had never made a contest on the principle of protection.

What has happened, therefore, to make the passage of this bill so possible in this House and to cause so many Republicans to support it as the lesser of two evils? The plain fact is that the Aldrich bill did not conform to the platform promise of the Republican Party. There was no attempt to make it comply with that platform pledge. On the contrary, a Speaker, with arbitrary power, appointed to the membership of the Ways and Means Committee men who were ultrahigh-tariff advocates. A majority of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee compelled an agreement that the majority members stand together for the Payne bill. It was brought into the House under the "gag" rule, permitting amendments to be offered upon only five items. Notwithstanding that display of force, all Republicans voted for the Payne bill because we thought it embodied fairly well the protective principle and we had previously had no opportunity to give it a careful analysis.

The Payne bill went over to the Senate. We had misgivings when we voted for it, but we hoped the Senate would reduce the inequalities that we feared might exist in it; but there, too, a compact force of consolidated votes, under the astute leadership of the Senator from Rhode Island, not only retained the inequalities of the Payne bill but greatly exaggerated them, and that in spite of earnest protests from within the Senate and from the country at large. The bill was sent to conference, Here, again, arbitrary power was exercised in the selection of ultrahigh-tariff members of the Ways and Means Committee as conferees. The result was a bill which did not embody the principle laid down in the national platform, but was the expression of consolidated force and self-interest. Everybody knows how the people expressed disapproval.

The Aldrich law is on the statute books. To vote against this reduction of 30 to 50 per cent is, in effect, to approve the Aldrich bill. This I can not do.

On the other hand, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Un-DERWOOD] and his Democratic associates on the Ways and Means Committee are forcing through this schedule with a lit-tle more refinement and yet by exactly the same methods. This bill is the embodiment of force. It is the work of a majority of the Ways and Means Committee acting as a unit, and back of it is the power of the caucus, forcing this bill through in a We know that were a man as eloquent as Demosthenes he might talk until he fell back exhausted in his chair, and not t" would be crossed or one "i" dotted by way of change in this bill. The Democratic caucus has passed upon it. Gentlemen on that side have entirely surrendered their right to exercise reason and discretion and have voluntarily accepted the chains forged for them in the caucus.

I have given this bill careful study. It reduces the tariff from 30 to 50 per cent on the products of the Steel Trust, and as I must choose between two evils I prefer this bill.

In short, I believe that if enough Republicans vote steadily to disapprove the method by which the Aldrich bill was enacted and the principle of protection perverted there will come a time in the near future when the people of this country will insist upon the appointment of a fair, competent, and unprejudiced tariff commission with adequate powers to ascertain the real cost of production at home and abroad, and then a bill will be passed, which, based upon the true principle of protection, will be a blessing and not a curse to the people of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan].
Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, in the few brief minutes allotted to me I want to enter my protest against the provisions in this bill which reduce the duty on lead and place zinc on the free list. So far as known there is no zinc or lead within the district which I represent, but in another congressional district of the State there are very large deposits of zinc and lead. I want to read from an article by Prof. Charles N. Gould, who was for a long time the State geologist of the State of Oklahoma, in which he says:

The lead and zinc deposits in the northeastern part of Oklahoma are among the most prolific in this country. Within the last two years a million dollars has been spent in mines and mill on a single square mile near Mlami, and more than that amount has been taken from the ground at this place in the form of lead and zinc ore. The area in which we may expect to find lead and zinc in paying qualities includes several thousand square miles.

In the same article he says:

MINERAL WEALTH.

In the same article he says:

MINERAL WEALTH.

No State in the Union possesses a greater variety or larger amount of undeveloped mineral wealth than does Oklahoma. During the past three years she has led the United States in the production of petroleum and last year produced 54,000,000 barrels of crude oil. The amount of natural gas in sight, including that being utilized, that going to waste, and that shut in, will approximate 2,000,000,000 cubic feet per day. At a conservative estimate not to exceed 20 per cent of the productive oil and gas fields have been developed. The United States Geological Survey is authority for the statement that the amount of coal in Oklahoma is 79,000,000,000 tons. These facts being true, it is obvious that, so far as we have available data. Oklahoma possesses a greater amount of fuel than any other State. When it is remembered that approximately 90 per cent of all the power used in manufacturing and other industrial purposes is derived from these three fuels, it will be easily understood what the future development of Oklahoma may be. But not in fuels alone is Oklahoma rich. The asphalt deposits in the southern part of the State are the most extensive in the Union. Complete data are not available, but at a conservative estimate there is enough asphalt in this region to pave all the streets of all the cities in the United States for the next hundred years, and even then one would scarcely know from where the material was taken.

Oklahoma possesses more gypsum than any other State. It is estimated that there are 125,000,000,000 tons of this material in sight in the western counties, which is enough to keep 100 mills, each manufacturing 100 tons a day, busy for 34,000 years. Oklahoma has enough salt water going to make 100 carloads of salt a day. Her glass-sand deposits are among the most extensive of those of any State. There is nouthern Oklahoma a ledge of glass sand averaging 50 feet thick and 60 miles long, which, on analysis, is found to be often 99.98 per cent pure silica.

The

of miles long, which, on analysis, is found to be often 99.98 per cent pure silica.

The granite deposits in Oklahoma are the finest in the country. Twenty or more varieties of shades and textures are found. The Wichita Mountains, 1,000 feet high and 60 miles long, in southwestern Oklahoma, are entirely composed of granite. An area of more than 100 square miles in the Arbuckle Mountains is covered with granite.

Oolitic limestone, superior to the famous Bedford stone, occurs in very large quantities. Six separate areas in Oklahoma contain inexhaustible deposits of limestone, the greater part of which is suitable for the manufacture of Portland cement, for burning into lime, and for concrete rock, and much of it for building stone. Sandstone suitable for buildings is widely distributed. In the western counties it is usually red in color, while in the eastern part of the State it is gray or brown. Clays and shales suitable for the manufacture of brick, tile, sewer pipe, and a large variety of clay products are found in all parts of the State.

Oklahoma contains considerable deposits of high-grade manganese iron ore, some of the finest tripoil deposits in the country, great beds of volcanic ash, extensive deposits of novaculite, and a large variety of other minerals of minor importance.

Mr. Chairman, for some reason or other my distinguished

Mr. Chairman, for some reason or other my distinguished friend and colleague [Mr. DAVENPORT], who represents the third congressional district, in which these great zinc and lead mines are located, remains silent here to-day when we are about to enact a measure which will strike down and largely destroy the millions of dollars that have been invested in these mines in the last few years. I may have no authority to speak especially for the people of that district, but I do know that constituents of mine in the second district have placed their good money into the developing of zinc and lead mines in the third congressional district, and in their name I protest against any measure that will strike down that industry or hinder its development. As a citizen representing in part the State, I am interested in the development of this great new State, a State of magnificent possibilities.

According to the United States Geological Survey the lead and zinc products in Oklahoma, for 1910, were as follows: Tons of lead concentrates produced, 3,638, value $188,663; tons of zinc concentrates, 14,256, value $452,615; total value of production, $641,278.

Prof. Charles N. Gould, for a long time State geologist for Oklahoma, a gentleman who is recognized as high authority and who has made a thorough study of the mineral resources of Oklahoma, says Oklahoma is rich in agriculture. But she is also rich in her mineral resources. By the development and utilization of her mineral resources our State may become great in her manufacturing industries. For myself, I stand for a policy, and the party to which I belong—the Republican Party—stands for a policy that will encourage the development of the mineral resources of the State, and will aid in establishing factories and manufacturing throughout the State. According to the census of 1910, Oklahoma's population was a little less than 1,700,000. This population is largely employed in agriculture and trade and commerce. With the development of our princes. velopment of our mineral resources and reasonable growth in our manufacturing industries, Oklahoma's population in 1920 should reach nearly 3,000,000 people. I can not therefore support this bill, which, in my judgment, if it should become a law, would natural hinder delay and obstruct the progress growth. would retard, hinder, delay, and obstruct the progress, growth, and development of the State of Oklahoma, and would not add a single dollar to the wealth of a single citizen of the State, or contribute in the least to the prosperity of her people.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, five minutes is a short time in which to plead for the life of two great industries—zinc mining and zinc smelting—and for the employment the laborers have in these industries. There are large zinc smelting industries in my district and also large ore-mining industries. Close by, in the States of Missouri and Oklahoma, are great oremining industries. In 1909 we succeeded, after a long struggle, in getting a small duty placed on zinc ore. At the time we were urging that duty the same condition existed in Missouri and Kansas and Oklahoma that has been described by the gentleman from Wisconsin as existing in his district-idle mines and men without work.

I saw in 1908 empty houses miners had vacated. I saw business houses business men had vacated. I saw mines and mills idle. That was before the law was passed placing a duty on ore that this bill proposes to remove. I visited the same after the law had been passed, and I found these houses occupied by busy miners, and the business houses were occupied on every hand, and there was activity and industry. But during the time we were discussing the tariff on zinc ore one of the most experienced men in zinc smelting in this country—A. B. Cottrell, then of Missouri, and a Democrat-told me that the smelting industry in which he was interested, that of smelting zinc ore into zinc blocks, would be paralyzed if we did not raise the duty on zinc blocks and zinc sheets from $1.50 to $2.35. He said that zinc ore then being mined in old Mexico would be sent to Belgium, smelted in Belgium, and sent to our market, the entire freight from old Mexico around to our market being less than the freight from Pittsburg, Kans., to Pittsburgh, Pa., and his prophecy has come true in a large measure. Zinc blocks and sheet zinc are protected at 12 cents to 15 cents per pound. proposes to make it seven-tenths cent—a reduction that will close every smelter in our country. Every smelting industry in the State of Kansas will be closed if section 61 of this bill is agreed to. Every miner, therefore, in the Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma districts will go out of employment, and every man engaged as a laborer in a zinc-smelting factory in the States

Gentlemen, are you in favor of legislating men out of jobs; are you in favor of adding to the unemployed; are you in favor of adding children to the children that are employed in the industries of the country in order that they may assist their parents in making a living? Are you going to aggravate the parents in making a living! Are you going to be conditions described by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. conditions described by the fathers out of employment? If so, Hughes] by putting the fathers out of employment? If so, vote for this bill. If you do not want to do that, in the name of humanity, in the name of industry, in the name of opportunity to make a living, vote against it. I appeal to gentlemen from Missouri to vote for a Missouri industry. I appeal to the gentleman from the Joplin district to vote against this bill. am going to vote against it. I am going to vote against it in the interest of the men who work for a living in my district and in other districts of the United States. I would be unfit to be a Representative here if I could not look the men of my district in the face, and I could not do that if I voted them out of work. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 61, page 19, by adding, in line 20, after the word ad valorem," the following:
"Zinc in sheets, coated or plated with nickel or other metal, or solutions, 25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I now offer is substantially the same amendment which I offered earlier to-day to another section of this bill in relation to tin plate. This amendment is intended to provide a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on zinc in sheets, coated or plated with nickel or other metal or solutions. The coating or plating of sheets of tin or zinc with other metal is a separate and distinct industry, and the duty proposed by the bill on tin plates or zinc in sheets affords no protection whatever to the manufacturers of coated or plated sheets of zinc or tin, because they must buy their material-that is, the sheets of tin or zinc-in the market, and the only method by which they can receive any protection or advantage whatever over the foreign manufacturer is to provide a differential duty on coated or plated sheets over that which is provided for tin plate or zinc in sheets as proposed by this bill. In the tariff law of 1897 zinc had a protection of 2 cents per pound, while plated sheet zinc had a duty of 45 per cents per pound. cent ad valorem, amounting to about 31 cents per pound. Under the tariff act of 1909, now in force, the duty on sheet zinc is 15 cents per pound and on plated zinc is 15 cents per pound, thus providing a protection of only one-eighth of a cent per pound on plated sheet zinc over ordinary sheet zinc. There has been much complaint by the manufacturers that the present protective duty of only one-eighth of a cent per pound is entirely insufficient to cover the difference in labor cost between this and other countries manufacturing the same article and entirely insufficient to permit American manufacturers to compete at all on equal terms with the foreigner. It is now proposed by this bill to take off entirely the differential duty of one-eighth cent per pound on coated or plated sheet zinc and allow no protection whatever to the American manufacturer. The effect of enacting this bill into law as it now stands, so far as concerns this industry, would be that it would either close the American factories and drive the manufacturers of this product out of business, or, in order to enable them to compete at all, it would be necessary to reduce the scale of wages to the European standard.

The Payne law made very material reductions in the metal schedule generally, and as to this industry at least the reduction was greater than it should have been if we are to give any protection whatever to the American manufacturer. I believe implicitly in the Republican doctrine of protection to all American industries. That policy has built up these industries all over the country and has resulted in great benefits to all our people. It has made the manufacturers prosperous so that they have been enabled to employ great numbers of men at a scale of wages higher than is known in any other country on the face of the earth. The prosperity of the manufacturer, the steady employment of the wage earner, the highest rate of wages paid, has made a home market for all the products of the soil, so that all classes have received a share of the benefits. Some people express a desire to vote for this bill, because they think it will be a blow at the Steel Trust. Mr. Chairman, the testimony of those best qualified to judge, and of those most interested in the business, has been that a lowering of duties to a revenue tariff basis, or absolute free trade, in all the products of the United States Steel Co., would not injure that company in the least. Its capital, its control of resources, and of markets is such that it is entirely able to take care of itself. But not so with the smaller independent competing concerns. If no other interest were involved I would be willing for one to vote for free trade in all its products, feeling that I was doing that company or its employees no injury, but rather a benefit. But the industries which need proection, and which can not exist without protection, are the smaller and independent concerns which now compete with the United States Steel Co. If by a policy of free trade or revenue tariff you succeed, as you would succeed in driving out the smaller independent concerns that have no affiliations whatever with the trust, you would simply succeed in consolidating the business in the hands of the Steel Trust, giving them far greater power than they now have. I wish this amendment which I have proposed might be adopted. In case the bill should become a law it would save one industry in my district from destruction. However, I do not hope for its adoption. The die has been cast, and the Democratic majority in this House, aided by so-called insurgent Republicans, whose aid the Democratic Party do not need, have determined to pass this bill, and to ride rough-shod over all proposed amendments intended to protect American industries and American labor. But I say to the Democratic majority in this House, and to those who aid and abet their schemes for political capital and to fool the people, that a day of reckoning will come, and the people of this country, when they realize the danger they are in, and the destruction of their industries which will inevitably result from such legislation as is now proposed, will rise in their might and drive that party from power and permit those who aided and abetted them to retire with what grace they may to private life.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the various amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado to the amendment offered by the gen-. tleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

MANN) there were—ayes 55, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fuller].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, paragraph 61, line 20, strike out period and insert semi-colon and add the following words: "Zinc-bearing ore of all kinds, in-cluding calamine, 20 per cent ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, strike out lines 18, 19, and 20 and insert in lieu thereof the

"Zine in blocks or pigs and zine dust, 1g cents per pound; in sheets, 1g cents per pound; in sheets coated or plated with nickel or other metal, or solutions, 1g cents per pound; old and worn-out, fit only to be remanufactured, I cent per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph so that the law will stand as it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Campbell) there were—ayes 56, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

64. All steam engines, 15 per cent ad valorem; embroidering machines and lace-making machines, including machines for making lace curtains, nets, or nettings, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the report by the committee on this paragraph they estimate the importations in the future at $1,250,000 a year, to produce a revenue of $312,500 a year. Apparently they base that upon the importations of embroidery machinery during the past two years, when the fact is that there has been no embroidery machinery at any time imported which paid a duty. Under the Payne law embroidery machinery was admitted free of duty until January 1, 1911, and the figures given in the report of the importations for 1910 and 1911 were based on importations under the provision, temporary in character, admitting embroidery machinery free of duty. There is not the slightest warrant anywhere for the estimate made by the committee that this item of embroidering machines will produce a revenue of $312,500 a year, which only goes to show that this item, like other items in the bill, was presented without knowledge, without consideration, without judgment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois always assumes that no one knows anything about anything that comes before this House except himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that is a sweet statement to make, for at least in this case I have proved that I know more than the gentleman from Alabama does

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me see if the gentleman has proved Of course we knew the Payne bill admitted this embroidery machinery free, but in the last year $1,776,000 worth of this machinery was admitted.

Now, we have contended all the time, and you agree with us, that a reduction of rate will, under normal conditions, increase importations, and yet we cut this rate from 45 per cent to 25 per cent, and we only estimate $1,250,000 of importations, less than came in under your 45 per cent rate, and you say that we do not take that into the calculation. We do now estimate do not take that into the calculation that although the 45 per cent rate would be prohibitive, and this machinery would not have come except when you admitted it free last year, that the 25 per cent rate will be competitive, and that a certain amount of machinery will come; and this estimate was not made by the Democratic committee, but it was made by an expert of the Treasury Department under a Republican administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not assume that I am always correct, but I think it would be a safe assumption to assume that the gentleman from Alabama is usually incorrect. He has just stated that there was imported in 1911, the fiscal year, one million seven hundred and seventy-six thousand and odd dollars worth of embroidery machinery, which he says was imported under the 45 per cent duty-Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I did no

No; I did not.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not change his statement in the Record, it will show that way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said it came in free, but the rate was 45 per cent, which, if it had not been admitted free, would have been prohibitory.

Mr. MANN. The rate was 45 per cent; it came in free because it was imported prior to January, 1911—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman does not understand——

Mr. MANN. I do understand.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman from Alabama said it will come under the competitive rate of 25 per cent. Does not he know we do not make any of this machinery in this country and never have?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that.

Mr. PAYNE. How then does it come under the competitive rate of 25 per cent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because they are making some lace machinery now in this country; they have commenced it within the last year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have two or three lace-manufacturing establishments in the United States, and they are well supplied with machinery which was imported free of duty, and there is no likelihood under the tariff bill which the gentleman will present on the subject of laces that there will be any further establishments of the character in this country, but even if there were, there would be no importations at the rate of $1,250,000 a year. They made an estimate assuming that because large importations are made for the fiscal year 1911 a portion of these importations were made under the 45 per cent rate, when the fact is that they were all made before the 45 per cent rate took effect on the 1st of January, 1911, and they have to say, pleading the baby act when they do not stand for their report, that they obtained the figures from a Treasury clerk, which only emphasized what I said, that they bring in their report without knowledge and without judgment.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest further that this is the same Treasury clerk who attempted to make the chemical schedule for somebody over there in which were such egregious blunders, and which were never discovered by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee until he received the veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a mistake, I will say to the chairman of the committee, in the estimate of revenues. I will tell you the reason why. I had considerable to do with the importation of this machinery in keeping track of it. Some two hundred thousand dollars worth, I think, came to my own town and the machines are in operation there. Imports were made at eight different ports in the United States, if I remember correctly; I have the statement exactly in my office, given by the Treasury Department. If I were to guess I should say one point it went to was Dubuque, Iowa; one St. Louis; one Detroit; one Boston, New York, and Philadelphia; and, I think, one or two other points.

I have the precise record. The amount was more than stated here, but regardless of the fiscal year 1911, I think enough lace machinery has been imported under that provision of the Payne bill to establish the industry in the United States thoroughly, and we know that no more will be required, certainly for a good while to come, and that the estimate of $1,250,000 of future revenue annually is practically $1,250,000 out of the way for some years to come until the population increases and the demand for lace very largely increases.

I want to say just one word more in regard to that. I have watched the operation of the experiments under the Payne bill by which a new industry was established in this country, and, speaking of the question of wages and speaking of the efficiency of foreign and domestic labor, I want to say that I have visited that factory several times since it has been in operation.

I have seen a girl working on a bobbin-winding machine who three months before was working in Dresden, Germany, on precisely the same kind of a machine, getting $12 a week here, where she worked for 12 marks in Germany, or less than one-fourth of the price. I have seen men working on those same machines in my own town who four months before were working in Nottingham, England, on the same machines that came from Nottingham and earning $30 to $35 in one week, where in Nottingham they made $12.50 a week. I say it is absolutely impossible to continue that industry on the rates of duty that are contemplated by the Democratic Party, and were contemplated by it in the bills which they offered last summer, and compete with those rates of wages on precisely the same mnchinery, with precisely the same operators, running at precisely the same speed. And any man, or any boy, or child at school can reason that out for himself under those conditions.

I take absolutely no stock in the estimates or figures made by the statistician of the Treasury Department, who forgot in figuring an ad valorem equivalent of the duty on alcohol and figured at the rate of 60 cents a gallon instead of 60 cents a pound and reported it accordingly to the Ways and Means Com-Such an estimate as that and such an estimate as this absolutely nullify any figures which the gentlemen may make for the use of Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

65. Nippers and pliers of all kinds wholly or partly manufactured, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply wish to voice my protest against the provisions and the principles of this bill.

It is unreasonable in itself; it is unreasonable in the time in which it was brought up; and it is most unreasonable in the time in which it is being put through. Of course I appreciate, as we all do, that no debate is of any practical use here when the great majority is bound by a caucus. They can not be influenced by any discussion, because they can not vote against any provisions of the bill even if they should be convinced that they were unjust. And I suspect that my colleagues on this side of the House, without any caucus binding them, would be pretty apt to vote together for any of the amendments which I might offer. But I appreciate that offering amendments is useless, that the bill is going to be passed exactly as the caucus has decreed, and that all we can do by debate is just to voice our opinion.

The bill is unreasonable, because it was brought up when the ink was hardly dry on its print or on the report of the committee. We had no time to study it and then advise our constituents who were affected by it. I looked through the report to find out the basis upon which the bill was drawn. that apparently the committee investigated somewhat the steel and iron schedule, but when you come to the innumerable manufactures of steel and iron which go all through this bill, apparently the committee made no investigation at all, but simply guessed at what rate of duty they should impose

Take, for instance, the duty on needles. In the manufacture of needles the material, the iron and steel, is infinitesimal. Labor constitutes between 80 and 90 per cent of the whole cost of needles. And yet with the labor paid twice as much in this country as the same labor in the needle factories abroad, needles are only protected by a tariff of 25 per cent. No reason is given; no facts adduced; apparently it is a mere guess.

And so with all these innumerable small articles of manufacture through the bill—revolvers, rifles, watch parts, machine tools—nothing is given us in the report of the reasons on which the tariff is based, and apparently the committee has no knowledge and no reason for them except a mere estimate and a determination to everywhere make reductions, without any hearings or investigations whether the industries can survive. And now to take it up and force it through, as they are doing at this time, late on Saturday night, when we ought to be at home studying our Sunday-school lessons and preparing ourselves for the holy duties of to-morrow, is very appropriate. It is in accord with the reasonableness of the bill itself. Why, for the last three weeks the District of Columbia bill has been dragging its slow length along, and anybody who wanted time in which to talk about a four-room schoolhouse or the salary of the poundkeeper, or any insignificant subject, could get all he wanted. We always adjourned at 5 o'clock. And yet now on this bill, of vital importance to all our northern districts, the gentleman from Alabama every few minutes keeps rising and moving that debate on this and that section of the bill shall be closed. And it is now after 11 o'clock and we have been in continuous session more than 11 hours. Why is it that they are so afraid of debate? Why is it that they bring the bill up just as soon as it is printed, before either we or the country can familiarize ourselves with it, or with the reasons upon which it is based? Why is it that they give all the time anybody wishes on all other-bills and have not shown the least sign of haste or urgency, and yet when there comes up a really important bill, which affects us all, they are not willing to allow debate, they are not willing to have their reasons and motives disclosed or discussed? This would be a tragedy except for the one fact that we all know that the bill has no chance of becoming a law, and therefore it is merely a midnight farce. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

66. Articles or wares not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, composed wholly or in part of iron, steel, lead, copper, nickel, pewter, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, aluminum, or other metal, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I intend, Mr. Chairman, to vote for this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I know that no industry in my district will be advanced, directly or indirectly, by the defeat of this measure. I know of no interest in my district and of no industry that will be advanced or fostered, directly or indirectly, by the maintenance of the tribute which for many years we have paid to the steel and iron industry. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We have been willing for a great many years to contribute of our substance to the fostering of these industries. We have hoped to derive advantage and profit for ourselves by their maintenance, through the common welfare, through the upbuilding, possibly, of broader markets for our products, and by the general diversification and advancement of industries throughout the country. To us directly the duties on iron and steel have yielded nothing. Not a pound of iron or steel is produced in my district. This infant industry of 40 years ago, or 50 years ago, has become one of a giant brood, joining hands around the world, controlling the whole industry here, and controlling it abroad, beyond competition, above the aid of protective duties which have become, so far as this industry is concerned, mere gratuities. The abuse is one that must be remedied. I deplore the arbitrary method in which the bill is presented. It may be that matters could be suggested along the line of improvement for this bill. It may be that a tariff board could render judgment upon the various matters that have been involved in this bill, that would make its provisions more just and more equitable, but we know that in the present condition of affairs no tariff board can be maintained, no tariff board can be expected to report upon the measures that are presented in this bill, and we will be condemned to wait another 4 or 5, or possibly 10 years, before an opportunity is offered to vote upon this matter. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So far as I am concerned I intend to hit the abuse while I have [Applause on the Democratic side.] a chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HUBBARD. I ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hubbard] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was about to ask that debate on this paragraph close, but I see gentlemen on the other side rising, and I ask unanimous consent to close the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to close the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois proposes an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 21, line 8, by adding after the word "ad valorem," the following:

"Provided, That cotton gins, plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horse-rakes, cultivators, and thrashing machines shall be exempt from duty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line S, page 21, after the words "ad valorem," insert:
"Provided, That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by working men or working women employed more than eight hours per day shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the discussion has thrown a great deal of light upon the eight-hour question, and it may be that, so far as the majority are concerned, they may care to act upon that question now.

While the lamp holds out to burn The vilest sinner may return.

Mr. HEFLIN. Come over, then. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to provide, through this amendment, for some protection to those who manufacture at home, and who work under the eighthour wage scale, against the foreign-made goods, where a laborer is required to be employed for more than eight hours. mere matter of consistency might induce some of our friends on the other side, notably those who speak here on behalf of labor, as well as those who speak on behalf of the worker on the farm, to support this amendment. It would sound well when they go back to their districts if they are able to say that what they had done for American workmen they had done also for the workmen in foreign countries, and that if conditions in those countries were unfair, and if it were possible, as has been charged here, to employ labor two and one-half times as cheaply as we do in the United States, we might at least guarantee to American labor the benefit of this measure of protection against the workers in foreign countries who are compelled to work more than eight hours a day. Humanity, as well as the rights of labor, would seem to demand that those charged with responsibility on the other side of the House should vote for this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, during the course of the debate; if it can be called a debate, this afternoon, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] taunted this side of the House with the statement that that side of the House had inserted agricultural implements in the free-list bill. A moment ago I offered an amendment, which I freely confess I did not vote for, to insert in the bill the items which were included in the farmers' free-list bill, to put agricultural implements on the free list, and not a single Democrat voted for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on this paragraph. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore],

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 67, noes 122.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 8, add: "Provided further, That convict-made goods shall not be allowed entry into this country under the provisions of this bill."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

67. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, and the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 15 and 16, leaving the duty on iron ore as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 15 and 16, the whole of paragraph 67. Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, if this motion prevails, the present duty of 15 cents on iron ore will remain. The duty on iron ore under your Wilson bill was 40 cents a ton. We are now collecting through the customhouses the following revenue: In 1910 imported iron ore, $365,535. In 1911 we collected $283,117. We collected on zinc ore, which you propose to put on the free list, in 1910, $371,927. In 1911, $206,787.

You are taking from the Treasury of the United States, by putting iron and zinc ore on the free list, an average of $500,000 per annum. You are giving half of that amount to three corporations on iron ore, and you are going to close every zinc mine in this country if this bill shall become a law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Southern States-Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas-furnished 42 per cent of the lead ore of this country last year and 46 per cent of the zinc ore used in this country. So the proposition of placing both of these ores on the free list is to turn that business over to our foreign competitors and put the American producer of lead ore and zinc ore and iron ore out of the business in the United States. It will close every plant, destroy invested capital in every plant, and turn the army of working people, laboring men, out in idleness to join the army of the unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, there is iron ore in Maryland-

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUSTIN. If I can get more time.

BURNETT. Did not the gentleman make this same speech in regard to coal?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I have not talked about coal.

Mr. BURNETT. I mean heretofore.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have iron ore in Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas.

Mr. FOWLER. And in Illinois. Mr. AUSTIN. I am talking about the Southern States. We propose to import iron ore from Cuba, Spain, and Sweden rather than to buy it from the Southern States.

Now, some statement has been made here as to the United States Steel Co. controlling the iron ore in this country. The testimony on that point is conclusive that less than 32 per cent of iron ore in this country is in the control of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Chairman, I protest in the name of the South, I protest against the destruction of the iron-ore business, the aluminum industry, the zine business, and the pig-iron business at the hands of the Democratic Congress, made up of a majority of Representatives from the South. [Applause on the Republican side.1

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

68. Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall only take a minute. I am not going to vote for this bill. [Applause on the Republican I think no gentleman in this House desires more sincerely than I do to hit the Steel Trust, but I am not going to do it at the expense of the thousands of other industries whose products will be affected, probably adversely, by this legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.] No line has been written and no word has been spoken in this House upon which any man can base any just conclusion as to the effect of the provisions of this bill upon those industries. I hope that when this bill goes to another body at the other end of the Capitol it will revise the schedules so that the products of the Steel Trust will be hit somewhat harder than I believe they are in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

69. Barbed and all other fence wire and wire fencing and baling wire.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last The bill proposes to admit fence wire and wire fencing free of duty, but proposes to levy a duty on steel billets, from which the wire is made, and on zinc, which is used in coating the wire. That is real logic for you.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

72. Zinc-bearing ore of all kinds, including calamine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, strike out all of line 7.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have already said that this bill would strike down two great industries in which thousands of men are employed. For that reason I shall vote against the bill. I am not like the gentleman from Iowa—so anxious to kill a weasel that I will shoot into the chicken coop with a double-barreled shotgun, with both barrels. I would not get rid of a rat in the barn by burning the barn. I am not like the old woman who wanted to get rid of bedbugs so badly that she set the bedtick on fire and burnt the tick, the bed, and the house and everything in it. You are proposing by this bill to close industries, throw men out of work, take markets from farmers, and business from every kind of business man; you will paralyze railroads and throw their employees out of work. I do not propose to help you do this. If this bill had been considered by this House or by a tariff board, so that we could have given it the consideration to which the subject matter is entitled, I have no doubt that we might have perfected a bill that would not only pass this House but pass another body and meet the approval of the President of the United States.

But you gentlemen are resting secure, because you know that in another body it will be so amended that you will not recognize it when it returns and because you know that if it contains provisions that are inconsistent with the policy of protection which guarantees to labor the difference paid to labor in this country and that paid to labor abroad it will meet the veto of the President of the United States. The policy of the Republican Party, announced by its majority on this side, a majority of the minority, and as stood for by the Senate and President of the United States, is to maintain the industries in this country by protecting every product in such a way as to keep labor employed. You howl in behalf of labor from every stump throughout the campaigns you make. You come here and vote to put labor engaged in industries affected by this and other bills out of employment. You have stated in this discussion that this bill will permit the importation of millions of dollars worth of products from foreign countries, made by labor employed in foreign countries, in industries taxed in foreign countries, maintaining institutions in foreign countries. These countries do not have the standard of living or wages that we maintain here. There is not a country in the world that has as many laborers well employed at good wages as the United States. It is true that some unhappy and unfortunate conditions exist. These can not be avoided in any country. I deplore as much as any man that there should be a child who ought to be in school employed at any sort of work at any sort of wage. For that reason I am for a protective tariff high enough to protect every laborer employed in this country, so that he may get the highest possible wage. [Applause on the Republican side.] The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion last summer to visit the shippard located in my district in Quincy and to witness the launching of the largest battleship that has ever floated on the waters in any portion of the entire world. That ship, launched at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, represented a contract secured in competition of what is termed the "pauper" of England, of Germany, of France, of Russia, of China, of Japan, and of every other country of the world, and when that ship graced the waters of the sea it graced it with every plate rolled by highly paid American mechanics, every rivet driven by the strong, intelligent arm of an American workman receiving living wages, the highest tribute ever paid in the history of this country to the character, the capacity, and the ability of the most highly developed human engine the world has ever known, which, given ordinary conditions, will defy competition in any part of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You say, keep up a high protective tariff. To protect what? To protect the American manufacturer. Why? It would not keep your industries going for nine months in the year if it It would not were not for your export trade. Forty million dollars' manufactured cotton goods sold in the 12 months ending June 30, 1911, and 25 per cent of those goods sold in China in competition with pauper labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We want the American workman to be prosperous, but you can not close your doors to the entire world and then expect the entire world to come knocking at your doors to buy your wares.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, just a word on this matter. I have kept quiet during this discussion, but now we are at the closing hours of this debate, so called, and all through this debate the cry has been that you are legislating against the American manufacturer, but in the interest of the consumer and the American laborer. Well, gentlemen, it has been my experience in life that the first thing for a man who had his labor to sell was to find a man who had a job to give, and for years and years we have been building up under the protective tariff the industries of this country. We pride ourselves on our diversi-fied industries that we may give employment to American labor, encourage the American manufacturer, and now in this day and at this time a tariff bill is declared over and over again on the floor of this House in the last two days to be aimed at the man who furnishes employment to labor. Where will your laborer come out when the man who offers the laborer work is discouraged and led to withdraw his capital from industry?

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the contention is made against this bill by its opponents that a high tariff on iron and steel products should be levied for the benefit of the laborers in this industry. The fallacy of this contention is that high wages follow the enactment of a high tariff. The law of supply and demand is the potent factor in the regulation of wages, and not tariff schedules. This proposition statistics conclusively show. The great trouble with the Republicans on this proposition is that they would and have been fixing duties so high they prevent foreign-made goods from coming into this country and competing with American-made goods, but make no attempt to prevent cheap labor of foreign countries from coming here and supplanting American labor in American industries, taking their employment away and the bread from out of the mouths of the American laborers and their families. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

The policy they espouse does this, and has been doing it for The high protective policy encourages this, and it is the years. natural outgrowth inspired by the greed which such a policy begets.

Mr. Chairman, it has been amusing during the course of this debate to see the attempts and hear the pleas of the Republican champions of the high protective policies in justification of their position. They dare not resort to authentic proof, but evade it by calling unofficial information to contradict official evidence. In this they violate a well-established rule of evidence, universal in all courts, which is that a party can not impeach his own witness unless he has been unavoidably surprised at his

The Department of Commerce and Labor-Republican authority-has reported on this question affecting this identical industry, and I call attention now to what it says upon this subject, as follows:

Another striking characteristic of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry is the large proportion of unskilled workmen in the labor force. These unskilled workmen are very largely recruited from the ranks of recent immigrants. * * * Taking the employees in all occupations in the industry, nearly 60 per cent are foreign born, and nearly two-thirds of the foreign born are of the Slavic races.

This is an official statement of their witness, not ours, and we insist you shall not reject or contradict his evidence by unofficial statements. If incorrect, then by a proper and regular method have it corrected. Do not attempt to impeach it by an irregular and doubtful procedure. It clearly and conclusively shows that foreign labor is not and has not been kept out of this country, but while foreign goods are denied admission by prohibitive tariff schedules, foreign labor is freely admitted to compete in our industries with American labor and deprive it either of employment or reduce its wages to the level of the This is labor of the country from whence such labor comes. the result of high protection, and no one knows it better than [Applause on the Democratic side.] the American laborer. As to the wages protection produces the same report is of interest. Listen to what it says:

More than one-half, or 56.48 per cent, of the 172,706 employees included in the steel report of the Bureau of Labor earned 16 and under 25 cents per hour; almost one-fifth, 19.92 per cent, earned less than 16 cents per hour; almost exactly one-half, 49.69 per cent, earned less than 18 cents per hour; three-fourths, 76.40 per cent, earned less than 25 cents per hour; 97.45 per cent earned less than 50 cents per hour; and 2.55 per cent earned 50 cents and over per hour.

What a vast army of men are employed in this industry in Remember it has been the especial beneficiary of this country. all tariff legislation. Its owners have made colossal fortunes. They have become the kings of finance, the masters of the money markets, and yet the above report shows what miserably low wages are paid in this giant industry. This is a prominent and truthful illustration of what protection does for the wage earner and how it makes the laborer rich. Nearly 60 per cent of its employees get less than 16 cents per hour for their labor. and 60 per cent of all its employees are unable to speak a word of the English language, so recently are they from their Slavic homes. Yet in the face of this testimony of a high official, a Cabinet officer, Republican standpatters on the floor of this House have the audacity to contend that the duties on this line of products should not be reduced for the sake of American labor.

The schedules of duty are now prohibitive, preventing competition, and the producers are paying the lowest wages paid in any leading industrial business. The consumers are plundered without rhyme or reason, and yet it is all done, so they claim, in behalf of American labor. The advocates of this vicious and unjust system tell us duties must not be lowered and the plunderbund must be continued. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Out of this business who have made the colossal fortunesthe owners or their employees?

Who to-day engaged in this industry revel in wealth, travel in splendor, and dictate the policy of business not only in this county but throughout the world-the owners or the employees?

The owners are the kings of finance, and the employee is barely able to eke out an existence, and then say the tariff is all for the laboring man.

If the tariff is for the benefit of the laboring man, why his condition, why his low wages in the highly-protected industries and high wages in occupations which the tariff does not affect? The carpenter, the bricklayer, the plasterer, the painter, the paper hanger, and the printer, vocations not affected by the tariff schedules, and yet all get higher wages than the employees in the protected industries? If the theory of the protectionist is true, then the order would be reversed and they would get the highest wages and the other the lowest wages.

This false pretense of the protectionist plea has been exposed and all of the country is aware of the sham, and it can be successfully invoked no longer. The laboring man knows it to his sorrow and the consumer to his financial disadvantage. It is a weak subterfuge which has served its purpose and must pass away to return no more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman like five minutes more? Mr. CULLOP. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Cullor] have two minutes more. Is there objection? The Chair hears The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for his kindness. In the time allotted me I can conclude all I desired to say on this branch of the subject.

The laboring man has always been put forth as the supreme object of the standpatters when Congress attempts to legislate on the tariff question. He is made the ostensible factor of prime importance with them to conceal the real purpose of their efforts to assist the tariff barons in their plunder of the American consumers.

The products of American labor are sold in every market of the civilized world for less than they are sold to the consumers here at home as a result of our unjust tariff system. Why should we foster and sustain a policy which enables such a wrong to be perpetrated on our people?

What justification can be offered for it? Why punish the great mapority of our people in this way? Why sustain a policy that discriminates against our own people in favor of the foreigner? Duties are levied in this industry which prevent competition here with foreign goods, but enables our manufacturers to ship their productions abroad and undersell foreigners in their own markets. Against this I protest on behalf of an overwhelmingly large majority of the American people. They have protested through the ballot box, and to their voice we should listen.

It has been said here the President will veto this bill if enacted into law, because the Tariff Board has not reported on this schedule, it matters not whether right or wrong. That responsibility is his, not ours, and for its exercise the people will hold him responsible, not us. But he should be careful about the exercise of that great power. The election is only about nine months distant, and if I mistake not the temper of the times the people will exercise their great power then and name some one more responsive, more in sympathy with their desires, some good Democrat. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

If we are to wait on reports from the Tariff Board to revise the tariff, at the rate it has been proceeding it could not be revised in 20 years. Does the President, confessing the wrong heaped upon the American people by existing tariff laws, declare his policy to be that no revision will be permitted, no relief from these wrongs granted, but that the people must bear the burden, the tariff beneficiary reap the harvest and swell his fortune, until the Tariff Board favors the country with its report?

Such a course he will find to be indefensible in the judgment of the American people when he comes before them for reelection. Such a policy they will repudiate at the first op-

Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion to the Republicans on this floor, you may talk of your love, your fealty, to the cause of labor, but understand this, the laborer knows and well knows you have had 16 years of splendid opportunity to legislate in his behalf, but you refused to do it. Labor appealed to you to pass legislation which would enable the laborer to enjoy a constitutional right, that of trial by jury in certain cases where it is denied him when accused of crime; it was not granted, it was denied. His petition was refused, his plea spurned, his appeal repudiated by you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This was the manifestation of your true regard for him. He knows it, and will be no longer deceived by your professions of regard. The pledge of regard was equally as strong in that particular as is now made on the tariff question and he is aware of the fact that the Republican Party in revising the tariff schedules always attempts to make him the "stalking horse" to increase and maintain the high schedules which inure solely to the advantage of the tariff baron, who is the real beneficiary, in order to enable him to plunder the helpless consumer and swell the predatory fortunes of this favored class, which this special privilege abundantly affords, and they will be deceived no longer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

73. Cash registers, linotype and all typesetting machines, machine tools, printing presses, sewing machines, typewriters, and tar and oil spreading machines used in the construction and maintenance of roads and in improving them by the use of road preservatives, all the foregoing whether imported in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Long-WORTH] is recognized.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I also want to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire amend the paragraph on page 22, line 9, by striking out the words "machine tools."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 22, line 9, by striking out the words "machine tools."

[Mr. LONGWORTH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes longer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am willing to give him five minutes, but I want to move to adjourn before 12 o'clock, and hence it is impossible to do so. I will give the gentleman five minutes on Monday morning.

We do not want to remain in session after midnight. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Floyd of Arkansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18642, to revise the metal schedule, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Under-WOOD] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Alabama had better make that request on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Illinois oblect?

Mr. MANN. I do for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney General submitting estimates and reports of deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year 1912 and prior years under the Department of Justice and the courts of the United States (H. Doc. No. 487); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the president of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., transmitting to Congress the annual report of that company (H. Doc. No. 488); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10648) amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and to protect the same," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 267), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the REC-ORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
WILMINGTON, N. C., January 21, 1912.

Resolution in protest against any interference with the present scheme of operation of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Be it resoived, That the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, N. C., in meeting assembled January 23, 1912, has learned with dismay of a threatened innovation proposed by the Economy Board, which, if effected, would do away with the Revenue-Cutter Service as now operated.

Resolved, That, in view of the fact that in the brief period from August 20, 1911, to January 23, 1912, the command operated from the Wilmington Station alone has rescued 10 valuable vessels and cargoes, amounting in value to the sum of $785,000, and, further, has saved and preserved the lives of 102 seamen, officers, and, in some instances, women, and believing that in the average duration of 12 months the service, as performed at Wilmington, operates a saving of safely three to five millions of dollars in lives and property, to say nothing of the added confidence which the service, as now perfected and operated, gives to local and foreign shipping concerned with the coasts of the country, does hereby emphatically protest against any interference with the present maintenance and operation of the Revenue-Cutter Service and does pray that the Congress will overthrow any efforts which may tend to such interference.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this association, and, in addition, that a copy be furnished our Representatives and Senators in Congress with request that energetic action be taken by them for the prevention of the Suggested Interference.

Respectfully submitted,

M. V. GUERESS, MARCUS W. JACOBI, HUGH MACRAE, Committee.

EXECUTIVE CONTINGENT FUND OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present certain resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, and in compliance with its wish request that they be printed in the Congressional Record.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON EXECUTIVE CONTINGENT FUND.

To the Legislature of Mississippi:

Your committee has had under consideration for several days past the matter of Gov. Vardaman's disbursement of this and other funds during his administration, concerning which much has been said and published brondcast over the State derogatory to his business capacity and personal integrity. We were induced to enter upon this investiga-tion at this time by the written request of Gov. Vardaman, couched in the following language:

JACKSON, MISS,, January 6, 1912.

Hon. Frank Burkitt, Chairman Joint Committee on Executive Fund, Jackson, Miss.

My Dear Sir: I am going to ask you, and through you the joint committee, to investigate and report to your respective houses the matter of my handling the funds committed to me while governor. I have been the victim of much persecution and the target of all manner of obloquy and slander. The legislature is the only tribunal vested with the power to settle this matter, and I trust your committee will take the matter up and do justice between the State of Mississippi and me in the premises.

Cordially and sincerely,

Jas. K. Vardaman.

In complying with this request the committee proceeded with the investigation by first calling Mr. C. J. Moore, the expert accountant, who has spent much time in going over the records, at a cost to the State of $1,535, and who has given out to the press for months past interviews charging that Gov. Vardaman had drawn and expended money for which he can find no vouchers in the governor's office. This is probably true, but Hon. George R. Edwards, who served as private secretary for 2 years and 10 months of Gov. Vardaman's term, testified that vouchers were taken for every cent expended during his time, and Mr. W. J. Buck, who succeeded him and who is at present the most efficient private secretary of Gov. Noel, tells your committee that he followed the same rule and filed vouchers for every expenditure, save $10 paid for postage stamps, during the 14 months he served as Gov. Vardaman's secretary. Mr. Buck also informed your committee that he made up the executive contingent fund to the end of the year 1907 and that said account tallied with the auditor's and treasurer's books, except the $10 above mentioned, a receipt for which was afterwards found. "The metal case in which these vouchers were placed," said Mr. Buck, "was not locked, and any person desiring to do so might have access to them." Whether the missing vouchers were designedly removed or misplaced by accident Mr. Buck nor the committee is prepared to say, but it is a matter of record that while Edwards was secretary the joint committee, headed by Hon. G. Wood McGee, on April 19, 1904 and 1905, and found it correct. (See report of committee, senate journal 1906, p. 1078; also see Chairman Greaves's report, house journal, p. 1290.)

It is a significant fact that Accountant Moore's report shows that Vardaman was behind on account of this fund for these years, which only proved that some of the vouchers examined by the McGee committee on April 19, 1906, were afterwards lost, mislaid, or had been abstracted, for Edwards testifies that on this occasion Vardaman called the stub book and he produced the vouchers, one by one, until the investigation was complete.

Another significant fact is, we find the word "unsatisfactory," Exhibit 6, page 12, report of committee of 1910, was ordered stricken out by the committee at that time a by the committee at that time and was left in by oversight, the order being to strike out the word "unsatisfactory" wherever it appeared in the report.

Secretary Buck made up the statement showing the disbursement of this fund for the years 1906 and 1907, and was ready to present it to the joint committee appointed in 1908, but that committee made no investigation until two years afterwards, when it appeared some of the vouchers were missing. Your committee has been unable to determine by what instrumentality these vouchers disappeared, but we think it is rational to conclude that neither Vardaman nor any friend of his abstracted them from the file. Much has been said and written about a double expense charge made by Gov. Vardaman on the occasion of his visit made to the university, and also one made to the East Mississippi Insane Hospital. Accountant Moore told your committee that Gov. Vardaman drew from the contingent funds sums of money to pay the expenses of these trips, and also drew the same or similar amounts out of the university and hospital funds, and this he regarded as positive proof of the pisappropriation of public funds. Mr. Moore, perhaps, did not know that Gov. Vardaman made an experiment with bloodhounds following a negro several miles around Oxford and finally treeing him in the courthouse yard, as an object lesson to the hundreds of darkies assembled there at that time, and that he paid all the expenses of the experiment, including the hire of the negro, livery teams, etc.; and he, perhaps, was not apprised of the fact that Gov. Vardaman on one or more of his visits to the East Mississippi Insane Hospital found it necessary to carry a private secretary with him, and, of course, his expenses were paid out of the contingent fund; but he did not know that owing to delayed trains, caused by wrecks or washouts, the expenses of such trips are often largely increased, and the apparent double charges which proved so convincing to him and his alders and abettors would possibly have never been though

THE MERIDIAN CYCLONE FUND.

In reference to the Meridian cyclone fund we find the following state of facts:

The governor is charged by the expert accountant with $4,931 and credited with $4,000 turned over to Col. H. M. Street. In a time of such dire distress as prevailed at Meridian when the city was visited by the terrible tornado—when live and dead men were pinned down under the fallen houses—a methodical Wall Street banker would have scarcely thought of calmly paying out money and exacting a receipt from everyone with whom he had to deal; but the testimony of Col. Rachford and Mr. W. H. King discloses the fact that Gov. Vardaman, on hearing the news of the awful calamity, immediately chartered a special train and engaged these gentlemen to secure as many negro laborers in Jackson as possible; that the train left here with 35 or 40 of these laborers; tifat it stopped at the Rankin farm and took aboard all of the abled-bodied convicts; that at Pelehatchie a few more laborers were secured; and when the train reached Meridian this force was put to work clearing away the débris. Mr. King was furnished with the money to pay the free laborers he employed. The governor, of course, paid for the maintenance of the convicts while there; and Gen. Fridge, being on the ground with the National Guard, was directed by the governor to press every able-bodied man into service and compel their assistance in the work of rescue, and that well-known and very efficient officer tells your committee that he paid out to these impressed men $175.50, which was furnished him by the governor. Mr. King thinks he expended some six or seven hundred dollars in settling with the laborers he controlled, including his own salary, which, he says, was allowed him from Saturday until Tuesday week following at the rate of $5 and expenses. He states that in settling with the governor he furnished an itemized account from the time book he kept, but that this book he used on that occasion was burned when his house was destroyed by fire; consequently he could not a this late da

THE ANTEDATED NOTES.

While this matter is not a part of the executive contingent fund, a deal of criticism has been indulged in because notes were antedated in order to borrow $20,000 to tide the State government over the summer of low words and the state government over the summer of the committee was aware of the fact that the application for this loan was made to the Merchants Bank & Trust Co. of the city of Your committee was aware of the fact that the application for this loan was made to the Merchants Bank & Trust Co. of the city of Jackson, Miss., but the details were unknown to any one of us until explained by the gentlemanly president of that institution. Mr. Anderson stated, in substance, that about May 1 of that year Gov. Vardaman culled on him requesting the loan, which he sail would not be needed before 120. When the summer of the substance was the loan from his bank at that rate of interest, for money was at that time rated at New York at 5 per cent, but he undertook to negotiate from the Equitable Life Assurance Society the loan, and instituted at once a correspondence with Mr. Paul Morton, who was at that time rated at New York at 5 per cent, but he undertook to negotiate from the Equitable Life Assurance Society the loan, and instituted at once a correspondence with Mr. Paul Morton, who was at that time the president of the Equitable. It was ascertained that the money could be obtained, provided an arrangement could be made by which the cost of transporting the $200,000 to 10 ays, and a brokerage commission to the Merchants' Bank. To do this the governor was confronted with the alternative, either to antedate the notes or to call an extraordinary session of the legislature at oss to the people of from $25,000 to $30,000. In this emergency it was agreed that if Mr. Anderson would indorse the not

THE BRYAN FUND.

Which was a donation of $500 by that distinguished gentleman to the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, was also the subject matter of gross misrepresentation during the late strenuous campaign. The facts are Gov. Vardaman paid the interest on this fund while he held it in hand, and after he retired from office he paid over the money to President Whitfield or the authorized agent of the college. Indeed, all the curious may be satisfied as regards the disposition of this fund by reference to House Journal, 1910, pages 1529 and 1530, wherein Mr. Gaston, secretary of the Industrial Institute and College, reports the settlement of this matter in full.

THE BATTLESHIP FUND.

This was a fund raised by private subscription for the purpose of purchasing a silver service for the battleship named for our State. Your committee has been shown the little book in which the original entries were made crediting individuals and committees for their respective contributions and naming, in the case of committees, the party who paid him the money. These entries were made by Mr. George R. Edwards, then private secretary to the governor, showing the date when the money was received in every instance except two, which are in the handwriting of Gov. Vardaman. Total amount collected was $1,705.50, and this, we understand, is the exact sum paid over to the silver-service commission.

Your committee has endeavored to investigate the disbursement of these several funds without bias and with a united purpose to give both sides of the controversy every opportunity to be heard, and after having examined 15 witnesses we have evolved the facts as above stated, and by unanimous agreement offer the following resolution, with the hope that it may meet a unanimous indorsement:

"Resolved, That the report of the joint committee on executive contingent funds be approved, and that James K. Vardaman is, and of right should be, exonerated by this legislature, as he has been by an unprecedented majority of the people at the polls, from any and all charges of misappropriation of public or trust funds of any character handled by him while governor of Mississippi.

"Resolved further, That this report be spread upon the journals of the senate and house and that a copy be forwarded to Senator John Sharp Williams, with instructions to request that it be printed in the Congressional Record.

STOKES V. ROBERTSON,

STOKES V. ROBERTSON, Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I likewise want to have inserted immediately after the resolutions a letter from me to the secretary of the Mississippi State Senate, which is a copy of a letter which was sent to the clerk of the Mississippi House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the Record, to follow the memorial from the legislature.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 29, 1912.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Mr. J. W. T. Falkner,

Secretary of the Senate, Jackson, Miss.

My Dear Sir: I received upon Friday, too late to offer that day to the Sehate of the United States, the communication signed by you and by the clerk of the house of representatives, containing certain resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which they desire to have published in the Congressional Record. The Senate adjourned on Friday until Monday.

I have no sort of objection to making the request of the United States Senate that the matter sent me shall be so published. I note, however, that the last part of the last clause of the resolutions is in these words: "That a copy be forwarded to Senator John Sharp Williams with instructions to request that it be published in the Congressional Record."

(The italies are mine.)

I at first thought that I would send the resolutions back to you, with the request that they be submitted to the two houses of the Mississippi State Legislature, with a view of having the word "instruct" stricken out and the word "request" substituted therefor. I subsequently concluded, however, that if I did that, it might be misunderstood, and even where not misunderstood purposely tortured misconstructively, and that it was better to ignore the word "instruct" and to treat the communication as a request, in so far as the last clause is concerned, and to make the request of the Senate which was asked me. This I shall do to-day, Monday.

I think, however, that it is due to the people of Mississippi and to myself to lodge with the two houses of the Mississippi State Legislature. Even in the old days when the legislatures elected Senators the right of a State legislature to instruct a Senator was a mooted question. The assertion of such a right was defied by Senator Lamar. I have heard Senator Waithall deny it, and have understood that Senator, afterwards President, Davis questioned it.

I was one of those men in Mississippi who, when the legislature to the common m

The reason, even in the old time, when legislatures "made and unmade" Senators, which was conclusive to my mind against the general right of legislative instruction, was this: That if such a right existed, then a Whig legislature might instruct a Senator who had been elected by a Democratic legislature might instruct a Senator who had been elected by a Democratic legislature might instruct a Senator who had been elected by a Democratic legislature might instruct a Senator who had been elected by one body of one school of politics, for the express purpose of advocating the policies of that school of politics, instructed by another legislature to nullify the policies to which he had pledged himself, and in favor of which he was instructed by the body which elected him.

Leaving, however, the old argument in the old time out of consideration, I can not, under the new régime, where the people of Mississippi elect their own Senators by instructing the legislature for whom they shall vote, let pass a new assertion, under entirely new conditions, of a former and a questioned right. As legislatures no longer elect Senators in Mississippi, except pro forma, they no longer have the right to instruct them, even if they ever had it, which is a disputable proposition.

For fear my compliance with your wish to get leave to insert your resolutions in the Conguessional Record, under the phaseology of your last resolution, might be tortured in the future into a precedent, and quoted as such, I write this letter to say that I have concluded to regard your so-called "instructions" as a request made to me upon your part, and so regarding it shall comply with it, as I would with almost any other request of any Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I have thought this statement due, not so much to myself as to the people of the State, who are my masters and yours, and no less yours than mine.

I would request that this letter be spread upon your record or journal, so that for future time my compliance with your wish may not be to pression of regard, Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

SURPLUS LANDS IN STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs will be stated.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota some questions. I do not know whether to ask him before the amendment is presented to the Senate or not.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is simply a clerical error. It does not matter whether the Senator propounds his questions now or later.

Mr. BACON. If it is merely a clerical matter, I will propound my questions first.

I confess, speaking generally, that I know nothing about Indian affairs. I have never been on that committee, and there is none of that property involved in by section, but I do recall the fact that the Senator from South Dakota has had passed within the last several sessions quite a number of these laws, and I remember that in the discussions which have ensued there has been developed the fact that very large sums of money were involved and that in several instances, where there were large exchanges of land, there was some very important things that required very close attention on the part of the Senate.

I do not mean to suggest that there is anything in this bill to which I would object; there may not be; but I do think it is a matter of sufficient importance to have a full explanation on the part of the Senator from South Dakota.

I will illustrate to him as somewhat of an indication of the matters upon which I desire to have some information: I would like to know in the first place how much in the way of territory is involved in this bill. I want to know of just how much of the proceeds or the benefits derived from the sales of these lands, by exchange or otherwise, the Indians are to be the direct beneficiaries?

Then I want to know how many others, if the Senator pleases, are to be beneficiaries under this bill, whether they be those interested in educational matters or otherwise.

I think we are entitled, in view of the fact that it is public domain and that this is not simply a mere sale, where the settlers will buy and where the Indians will receive the money, but where from the reading of the bill, as I gather, there are a good many involved matters, to know from the Senator what is the fact about those matters and others. I think the bill ought to be fully explained to the Senate.

Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. President, the total area involved in the present bill embraces 1,131,280 acres of land. That part of the area within the State of South Dakota embraces 748,880 acres and in North Dakota 564,480 acres.

Some four years ago about one-half of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, embracing lands almost entirely within the State of South Dakota, a slight portion being in North Dakota, were opened to settlement. By this it is proposed to open to settlement all of the remaining lands on this reservation, aggregating the acreage which I stated, and embraces lands in both of these States. This bill is identical in its provisions, with only one slight and unimportant modification as to the selection of school lands where sections 16 or 36 have been taken by allotments to Indians, to the one that passed the Senate during the last Congress and to which the attention of the senior Senator from Georgia was attracted at the time and was a subject of discussion. A bill identical in form passed the Senate last week for the opening to settlement of the remaining lands upon the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, immediately south of the area embraced within the provisions of the pending measure and with an acreage substantially the same as this. This measure also passed the Senate during the last Congress, but neither bill passed the House during that Congress. As a result, the bill is again here for consideration.

In the first instance, all the Indians upon this reservation who have not already received allotments will, under the provisions of this bill, be given allotments before the lands are opened to settlement. All the remaining and unallotted lands, except the school lands reserved to the respective States, are opened, too, through authority given in the bill, by proclamation issued by the President of the United States. The bill further provides that a commission, consisting of three members, shall be appointed by the President to appraise and classify the lands to be opened. The Indians are represented thereon by some one holding tribal relations with the tribe. The Interior Department is also represented on the commission. A resident citizen of each State, respectively, is made a member of the commission, and each to act only while the lands in the respective States are under consideration. The commission must complete its work within six months from its organization, and the appraisement and classification so made are subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The settlers who file upon the lands thus opened must pay at the time of filing one-fifth of the appraised price in cash. Within two years thereafter one-fifth of the balance is paid annually until the whole amount due is liquidated. final payment must be made within six years from the date of filing. The Government acts solely as the trustee for the Indians in disposing of the lands. In no sense is the Government responsible to the Indians or to the settler. If the settler does not make payment in compliance with the law, he forfeits his rights, loses his land, and the payments theretofore made inure to the benefit of the Indians. The amounts so paid by the settlers are placed in the Federal Treasury to the credit of the tribe and interest at the rate of 3 per cent is paid thereon, as provided by the terms of the bill.

Under the enabling act by which the State was admitted into the Union the school sections were granted to the State, and the State is given under this bill the right to take sections 16 and 36 in each township, as was provided by the organic act, and the Government pays the Indians therefor. No regard is or has been paid by the Government in the matter of allotments as regards sections 16 and 36. Frequently these sections, or parts of them, are taken by Indians, and where they are thus lost to the State by being so taken, then the State is given the right to take another section, or part of a section, in lieu thereof, as the case may be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand the Senator from South

Dakota to say that the lands going to the State as school lands are to be paid for out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. GAMBLE. Out of the Public Treasury. That is the agreement under the enabling act, and that has been the uniform practice heretofore.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator says that has been the prac-

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; and it has been uniformly followed. I think that covers all of the substantial features of the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand the explanation of the Senator from South Dakota to be to the effect that the lands are to be sold and the Indians will get the benefit of the proceeds, and then there are provision as to settlers by which they will receive their title, and so forth. I have not had op-portunity to look over the bill. I did not know until the Senator made the statement that it is the same bill that we had up in the last Congress. I recognized that it had many of the same features, and I recollected somewhat indistinctly that when we had the bill up before us in the last Congress the thing about which there was the greatest discussion was—

Mr. GAMBLE. Land lotteries.

Mr. BACON. The large sum of money which would go to the Am I not correct about that?

GAMBLE. No; I think not. Because the amount named in this bill is the same sum that was in the bill when it formerly was under consideration. I might say after this bill in the first instance was introduced it was submitted by a special agent of the Interior Department to the Indians of this reservation, and its provisions were agreed to by them. Some suggestions were made by the Indians as to modifications, and these were considered by the department, and most of them were made a part of the bill. It is identical in its provisions with the former bill, except as it applies to the school sections, as I have heretofore suggested.

Mr. BACON. The Senator states that under the enabling act certain sections were reserved for the public-school system of the State

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; and granted to the State by the act. Mr. BACON. By the enabling act, specifying sections 16 and 36?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BACON. Very well. The question I want to ask the Senator is this: I understand from the Senator that if any of these sections 16 and 36 have already been allotted to the Indians, the State, under authority of this bill, is authorized to proceed to make selections of other locations in lieu thereof.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. Mr. BACON. I presume there is a considerable difference in the value of some of those sections of land.

Mr. GAMBLE. They must be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior-

Mr. BACON. What? Mr. GAMBLE. That is, the selections are to be made by the governor of the State, or through his representative, and these selections must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. BACON. Is there any provision that the lands shall be of like value?

Mr. GAMBLE. No; there is not, because the approval of the Secretary of the Interior is required, and this would be a protection in that regard.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator think there should be a provision that the lands should be of like value?

Mr. GAMBLE. I hardly think so, because the proposition would be this: The Indians have already selected the school lands, for the reason, undoubtedly, they are the best. Then to all the remaining Indians lands have been allotted, and the poorer class of land remains, from which the selection must be made, so that in no event would it be better lands than that taken

Mr. BACON. If in no event there could be a better selection, there would not be any harm done to North Dakota or South Dakota, as the case may be, if there was a provision that the lands selected should not exceed in value those in sections 16 or 36, of which the State had been deprived.

Mr. GAMBLE. I would have no objection to such an amendment. At the same time, the bill is guarded in that respect for the reason that the selections must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in that way the Indians would be protected.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator further if there are any other lands, except sections 16 and 36 or those which may be chosen in place thereof, the proceeds of which, or the lands themselves, go to any other persons than to the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir. There is a provision in regard to town sites.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Mr. GAMBLE. They would be selected and reserved for town-site purposes by the Secretary of the Interior. From the sale of the lots there is a reservation of 20 per cent, which goes to the benefit of the town with which to build schoolhouses or to make public improvements for the local community. But all the proceeds except the 20 per cent go to the Indians.

Mr. BACON. Do not the towns get the proceeds of sections 16 and 36 in the same way?

Mr. GAMBLE. No; that does not apply in the same way. The lots are sold by the Government for the benefit of the Indians and the money turned into the Federal Treasury for their benefit. This was thought a wise provision. It had the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and was, as I recall it, suggested as an amendment by the department. This is the usual provision found in bills of this character for the past few

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not catch my question, or, possibly, I am infelicitous in its expression. The enabling act gives to the State of South Dakota sections 16 and 36 for public school purposes.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. Mr. BACON. Now, that is not limited to the area of South Dakota outside of the municipal organizations, is it? In other

Mr. GAMBLE. It is sections 16 and 36, and it is so provided by the enabling act. Now, these town sites or towns that may be laid out will not be laid out on sections 16 and 36. They will be located elsewhere.

If the Senator would permit me to state the question before he replies possibly it would save time. I am asking a specific question, and it is merely for information. That is whether the enabling act which sets aside sections 16 and 36 limits the benefit of that provision to outside of the town sites or towns, whichever you may call them, or whether the towns or townships are not entitled to their regular proportion of sections 16 and 36, the same as any other.

Mr. GAMBLE. They are.
Mr. BACON. Then, the purpose here is to go beyond the provisions of the enabling act, which gives sections 16 and 36 of whatever subdivision or whatever name it may be given-

Mr. GAMBLE. The township.

Mr. BACON. To the township for the purpose of public schools, and now proposes, wherever there is a town laid, in addition it shall have 20 per cent of the proceeds. In other words, that is taken from the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. In the opening of the lands on this reserva-tion about four years ago the area opened then was substantially the same as is here proposed.

I think there were only two or three Government town sites reserved, with an area of probably 80 acres each; I do not re-call the size—at least not over a hundred and sixty acres; and it was thought wise by the department, and it was suggested by the department, that in the sale of the town lots, under new conditions, with no opportunity for the levy of taxes, that at first 20 per cent might be reserved for the benefit of the community in the building of schoolhouses. There is also a provision reserving a small area for a park.

Mr. BACON. That would depend a great deal upon the number of towns laid off.
Mr. GAMBLE. That would be done by the Secretary of the Interior, so that there would be no hardship or imposition practiced upon the Indians.

Mr. BACON. That may be done by the Secretary of the Interior, but it is our business to pass laws, and we ought not to include in a law any improper provisions on the theory that the danger will be minimized by giving to the Secretary of the Interior opportunity to concur or nonconcur.

I do not like to interfere in a matter which does not par-ticularly concern me. I am not on the committee. As I said in the beginning, I know little or nothing about the conditions relating to Indian affairs, and I am not in one of the States where that question can possibly be raised, because in my State the Government has never owned any land except such as has been ceded to it for public buildings, and so forth. But I re-call, Mr. President, the debate in the last Congress when there were very substantial objections made to the Senator's bill, and in the absence of objection to its consideration, I have taken the responsibility of at least calling attention to it. I do not propose to make myself officious in the matter by offering an amendment or anything else. I do say, however, it strikes me that when the Government has set apart sections 16 and 36 for public educational purposes in every township it has acted very liberally. Some people have challenged the propriety of this setting apart of the public domain for the special benefit of the States organized within which this public domain may be situated. I confess I have been myself disposed to recognize the impropriety of such a grant to the States. But that question was passed upon when the enabling act was passed. The liberal provision of two sections in every township was made, and now this is just that much money taken away from those Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. In my judgment there would be no loss to the Indians, because the proceeds go to them, with the exception of the amount named.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator from Georgia let me cite him a concrete example, by the permission of the Senator from South Dakota? If the Senator was more familiar with the conditions attending the opening of Indian lands to white settlement, I think he would say instead of 20 per cent it ought to be 40 per cent.

The section to which the Senator called attention, and to which he finds some objection, merely provides that when these town sites on the Indian lands are sold the proceeds shall go into Indian funds, credited to them, but that 20 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of the town lots shall go into the school fund to build schoolhouses at these new towns.

Mr. BACON. And parks.
Mr. DIXON. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia I recall personally a case where an Indian reservation was opened without such a provision. The people take up these lands, paying for the same in five annual installments, with the result that there is little taxable land for that length of time. There is no taxable property in those counties, and but little personal property, for four or five years to come. The lands are settled, with hundreds of children demanding school facilities and with no property taxable in the county. This provision merely takes 20 per cent of the proceeds from the sale of the town site to build schoolhouses for the white and Indian children in that locality.

I had a letter the other day from an Indian reservation opened in my State without this wise provision. The there are 300 Indian children in that school district. have no money in the public-school fund for the reason that there is little assessable property. They are asking the department here to help them to the extent of $100 a month to take care of these wards of the Government.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly. Mr. BACON. Why does not the State of Montana provide for its public schools?

Mr. DIXON. It does; but the counties levy their own school funds. In the counties opened in the Indian country there is We appropriated last year $250,000 for no taxable property. We appropriated last year $250,000 for Indian counties in Oklahoma where the title was held under trust patents, and not one acre in twenty in the county was subject to taxation. It leaves whole counties without any funds to carry on their local public schools. For that reason the department is now recommending that 20 per cent of the proceeds of the town sites shall be devoted to school purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. They do take it away from the Indian.
Mr. DIXON. The Indian participates in the schools.
Mr. BAILEY. But he furnishes what he participates in while the others participate in what they do not furnish. This is a proposition to sell the Indian's property even against his

Mr. DIXON. They are very happy to do it in this case.
Mr. BAILEY. Very often it is done against the will of the Indian, and the land is opened to white settlers. Now, you take 20 per cent of this particular property.
Mr. GAMBLE. Only town sites.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand. You take 20 per cent of this particular property and devote it to the education of his own children and the children of those who come to acquire his lands which have been opened for settlement.

As far as I am concerned, if this was land belonging to the United States, I would be willing to give it all to the State in which it is situated. I think we are wasting that estate, and I have said so repeatedly; but I am not willing to compel the Indians to give it away, for they will need the whole price of this land a long time before they are able to compete against those white people who will come in there to occupy it.

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator from Texas will permit me, these Indians form the richest community of Indians in the United States outside of Oklahoma.

Mr. BAILEY. They may be, but when the white men are there long enough they will not be. That has been the history

Mr. DIXON. The schools are for the white and the Indian children also.

Mr. BAILEY. But the white man is to have the benefit of the school for which the Indian pays. I am willing to see all they have taxed in common with everybody else in that community, and if it be true that they are richer than the others, then it would happen, as it ought to happen, that the richest men pay the highest tax, and they would contribute more, man for man, than their white neighbors, because they would pay according to their property, which is the proper basis of tax-

Mr. DIXON. Let me say to the Senator from Texas, under this law, and every other act opening Indian reservations to settlement, the Indian land is not taxed for 25 years.

Mr. BAILEY. It will not be safe for the Senator to say that. They exempted it in the State of Oklahoma and now the State has levied a tax upon them, and I have recently been consulted by some of those who are contesting the tax which is now levied upon their allotments.

Mr. DIXON. I say to the Senator from Texas that-

Mr. BAILEY. So it is not safe to say they will not be

Mr. DIXON. Let me say to the Senator from Texas I do not know what the statute was in Oklahoma, but-

Mr. BAILEY. They originally took their allotments under a specific agreement that they should be exempt from taxation for a term of years.

Mr. DIXON. In this case the Government is withholding the fee-simple title for 25 years. You leave a whole county with nothing to assess for taxes, and consequently no way of raising money to run the public schools. It is a godsend to the Indians to do this.

Under the conditions which follow the opening of Indian lands to settlement it leaves the whole community with no taxable property, and this merely provides for taking 20 per cent of the moneys arising from the sale of two town sites to supplement the school funds of those communities.

Mr. BACON. Do they get part of the sixteenth and thirtysixth sections?

Mr. DIXON. That goes to the general school fund of the State.

Mr. BACON. They participate in their part of it?
Mr. DIXON. They do whenever it is sold; but it may be 20 years before there is any sale of land. You are merely providing temporary means for carrying on public schools in those localities where there is nothing to tax.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us not take it out of the pockets of a fraction of the people of the State. South Dakota, I am sure, will be perfectly willing to educate her own children.

Mr. President, it is a poor tribute to the white race for us to say in Congress that the Indians must educate them.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the proposition is this—
Mr. BAILEY. Let us strike this out.
Mr. GAMBLE. No; I think it is a very wise provision.
Mr. BAILEY. Is it wise to make the Indian bear the white man's burdens?

Mr. GAMBLE. Here is a town site, sold by lots. Purchasers come and buy-

Mr. BAILEY. Those lots will be taxable, will they not? Mr. GAMBLE. They will be taxable. What are you going to do in the first instance?

Mr. BAILEY. Let the State of South Dakota provide for it. Mr. GAMBLE. There is no provision made in regard to it. It will be at least a year or a year and a half or two years before they can be realized upon. Purchasers going there, knowing that there will be school buildings and accommodations for their children, will give 20 per cent.

Mr. DIXON. One hundred per cent more.

Mr. GAMBLE. Or 100 per cent more than the property would otherwise sell for.

Mr. BAILEY. It is the uncarned increment, then, which you are after. These gentlemen feel that the influx of the white population is going to enhance the value of the Indians' land, and they proceed to take 20 per cent of it to educate their

Mr. President, that is not fair. I would not say it is not honest, because these Senators advocate it, and of course they would not advocate anything that they did not believe to be both honest and fair, but they will pardon me for saying that it is not fair to take what belongs to the Indians and devote it to the education of the white children attracted there by the sale of the Indian property.

Mr. GAMBLE. The Indians participate in it. Mr. BAHLEY. I understand that they are furnishing the entire fund and only enjoying a participation in it.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is due to the energy of the white men who come in and develop the property, and with these inducements held out the property would sell for much more.

Mr. BAILEY. And by the energy of the white man he will not only develop his part, but he will take the Indian's part, too. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. I do.
Mr. LODGE. I only desire to ask a question of the Senator from Texas. He said 20 per cent of the amount would be devoted to Indian education; I understood it to be for town im-

Mr. GAMBLE. No; to public schools— Mr. LODGE. Sections 16 and 36. Mr. GAMBLE. For the benefit of the communities.

Mr. BAILEY. But the difference between sections 16 and 36 is that the Government is there giving its own property, which it has a perfect right to do. Here it is giving the Indian's property, which it has no right to do. Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I have the floor, and I desire to say one word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia being entitled to the floor can say the one word.

Mr. BACON. The vital distinction between the enabling act and this law is that the enabling act set apart sections 16 and 36 for public-school purposes. This sets it apart not for public-school purposes only, but for the construction of schoolhouses, or public buildings, or other improvements in the town sites in which such lots are located; and the Senator from South Dakota went still further and included parks among the purposes to which one-fifth of the entire proceeds of these town-site lots should be devoted.

Mr. GAMBLE. It could be used for that purpose

I might say in reply that this agreement and bill were submitted to the Indians upon the reservation and it was entirely satisfactory to them.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, one of the most common things I have listened to in the discussion on Indian affairs since I have been in the Senate, and in which I have not participated, has been the denunciation of contracts made with the Indians in which gross injustice has been done to them, where they were not exactly free agents when they made the agreements.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to supplement the distinction which the Senator from Georgia has made. I have pointed out already that a further distinction is that in the case of sections granted under the enabling act for educational purposes the Government was giving its own property; and here the Government is giving the Indians' property.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is a matter of very little consequence. Mr. BAILEY. Then strike it out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
Mr. GAMBLE. It is a matter that has been recommended by the department. There are probably only two town sites covered. I believe it is a wise provision.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a bad thing to cheat the Indian when the price is worth the trouble. It is indefensible from every point of view to cheat him in a small matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the suggestion that the Indians participating in the benefits of the schools provided to be established and maintained by this act has no foundation. The Indians do not live in towns, and it is not contemplated that they shall live in towns. They have taken their allotments in the country. The towns will afford the Indians neither comfort nor maintenance. So this proposition to appropriate 20 per cent for the maintenance of schools and other improvements in the towns is exclusive of the Indians. I will, with the permission of the Senate, say something in addition to that when I have the floor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have accomplished the purpose I had in view, which was to call the attention of the Senate to it in order that those who are more familiar with this matter than I am may develop it. I think myself it is utterly and absolutely indefensible that we should take one-fifth of the choicest part of that which is to be put on the market, to wit, town sites, and take it away from the Indians when under the previous enactment with them we solemnly said they should have all except sections 16 and 36. That is all I desire

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on a former occasion, when the garments were being divided, I suggested that in the interest of equity the Indian should have some fund or provision for the establishment and maintenance of schools that would be where they live, in the country. This bill strips the Indian of every possible opportunity of either establishing or maintain-ing public schools on the reservation. It takes away from them the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections that are located in the immediate vicinity of the place where they are to live upon the allotments and sells them and puts the money in the Treasury, beyond the reach of the Indians. No allotment of land should be made to Indians, no reservation should be made, without providing for an adequate educational opportunity. These Indians number many thousands.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, before he resumes I want to call attention to another provision in the bill that had escaped me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. BACON. In fact, I had not had an opportunity to read the bill. In addition to the one-fifth of the proceeds of the sale of these lots there is this provision made, by which some of this additional part of the property will be taken from these Indians:

And he is-

That is, the Secretary of the Interiorhereby authorized to set apart-

I will state first that there is a provision that he shall select such parts or areas of these public lands as he may deem proper for future towns, and so forth, set them apart, cause them to be surveyed in lots and blocks, and so forth. Then the bill pro-

And he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any town site, and patents shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes upon receiving satisfactory evidence that said towns have been duly incorporated.

In addition to having one-fifth of all the proceeds of the sale of the lots they are to have 10 acres of additional land.

think both those items ought to be stricken out.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that provision has already been made for the education of the Indians upon these reservations. Day schools are provided; teachers are employed; the different churches have separate schools which are maintained. This bill in no sense interferes with the existing law or the rights of these particular Indians. the schoolhouses are built and schools maintained, the Indian children will have just as good a right to go to the common schools as the white children; and such is the practice in certain parts of my own State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like the Senator to point out the provision of law under which the common schools are maintained for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. I say that is the practice in our State, where schools are maintained on lands that theretofore belonged to

Mr. HEYBURN. But the Senator uses the term "common

I am speaking of common schools on both Mr. GAMBLE. the Sisseton and Yankton reservations. The Indians recently made protests against the construction of a central school at the Yankton Agency, which had been destroyed by fire, because they preferred to send their children to the public schools in the county.

Mr. HEYBURN. What was done with the protest?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think it was respected.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this question has come under my notice throughout 30 years of close contact with these people; I have lived practically in the Indian country for that long, and I have had an opportunity of observing something in regard to this question of Indian education. In my own State Congress provided for the building of a beautiful structure, absolutely inappropriate to the purpose for which it was built. It cost, I think, some $80,000, perhaps more. It takes the Indian children away from their homes; takes them from the daily contact with their parents and other members of their families. It clothes them better than they need or desire to be clothed; houses them better than they need or desire to be housed, and perhaps feeds them better. I do not know about that; but I know that it utterly fails to accomplish the purpose of the common-school education that would be best adapted to the advancement of those children.

I have spoken here many times in favor of the abandonment of these expensive Indian schools and the substitution of the little red schoolhouse at convenient points in the Indian coun-I know how they feel about it. They do not want their children to go away from them for months at a time and come back estranged, with new ideas, in the gathering of which they have not participated. They want their children educated conveniently to their homes, so that they will bring home every night with them that which they have been taught during the day, and that will build up an interchange of thought and idea in the Indian tepee or cabin or whatever the residence may be, so that they may all benefit by it; but when you send an Indian away and isolate him from the family, he begins to regard himself as somewhat superior to those who do not participate in his daily educational processes; he begins to look upon them as rather beneath him, and they begin to resent it. It works a feeling of resentment in the household.

I am not speaking without some facts to substantiate what I say. I am opposed to the centralization of the education of the Indian upon practical grounds. I would abolish every one of these expensive Indian schools that we have been building out of the Treasury, generally out of the Indians' money, against their wishes, not in conformity with their best interest. I would give them the benefit of that class of institutions upon which the civilization of the American people rests-the day school, convenient to the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from Idaho that already over the reservation where these lands are to be opened there are day schools maintained and teachers provided, and in no sense will this bill in the slightest degree interfere with that, but those schools will be continued and maintained.

Mr. BAILEY. Indian schools?

Mr. GAMBLE. Indian schools, at least for the time, until development comes, and then the State, under its taxing power, will take up the proposition of the schools and provide and maintain them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did I not know—
Mr. GAMBLE. I know in the county of Tripp, in what was formerly the Rosebud Reservation, which was opened to settlement only a few years since, this condition prevailed. I was in the county a year and a half ago. It was reported to me 63 new schoolhouses had been built by the local authorities, providing not only for the education of the white children, but for the education of the Indian children on the lands that were opened; and such conditions will exist in this reservation in a very short time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, let us not deceive ourselves. Senator from South Dakota is speaking of the lands that were thrown open to settlement under the previous act and that have been settled upon by white people. The Senator sticks to that statement?

Mr. GAMBLE. I mean to say that on this very reservation there was a large number of Indian schools maintained-coun-

Mr. HEYBURN. By whom? Mr. GAMBLE. By the Interior Department, by the Govern-

Mr. HEYBURN. I know about that.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota is speaking of a very limited condition existing because of local conditions. am speaking of a new condition that is proposed to be created by this act, and I am basing my suggestions upon the experience that we have had with the other reservations, except, perhaps, the one referred to by the Senator from South Dakota and one other, in which there has been a limited number of schools. This bill contains no provision adequate to meet the necessities for the education of either the Indians or the white

Mr. GAMBLE rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. The Indians have taken their allotments, and they are, in a large measure in this as in other cases, you might say, huddled together, for a convenient expression, for the Indians are clannish, as are many other nationalities, and where special providence in the nature of church organizations or charitable people combining have operated upon this community they may have been induced to establish a few schools; but I am speaking of the general condition upon the Indian reservations; and I have no hesitation in saying that this bill makes no adequate provision for either the education of the white people or of the Indians, because it does not leave any room whatever for acquiring a fund to provide for education.

Mr. GAMBLE. Now, Mr. President-Mr. HEYBURN. I should like—

Mr. GAMBLE. I wish to say a word right upon that very I spoke but a moment ago of the Rosebud Reservaproposition. tion and of Tripp County. When the lands were opened and the settlers went in and settled the county, the local laws of the State of South Dakota provided for the organization of a county government. When that is done, then the townships and the county take up the proposition, build and construct schoolhouses, and provide the benefits of the common school, not only for the white children, but for the Indian children.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President— Mr. GAMBLE. Such, Mr. President, has been the case practically all over the western part of the State. These conditions will apply on these lands and in this locality the same as they have in other sections of the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, let us take the suggestions of the Senator from South Dakota and apply them to the provisions of this bill. The title to the land does not pass to the Indians so that the State or county could levy taxes upon either the Indians or the white people in it. The title to the white man under the provisions of this bill is held in suspense for five years. During that time it can not be taxed. There is nothing remaining to be taxed to support the education of either race until the end of five years, except it be an occupation tax, a license tax, or such minor taxes.

Mr. GAMBLE. Oh, no: the provision of the law is that within 14 months commutation can be had.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; but that is a privilege and not a cuty. They may commute or they may not.

Mr. GAMBLE rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, just let me develop this idea. I will be brief about it and I know about it. We have in our State an Indian reservation, and I know the Indian reservations under consideration. I have been on them, and I know something about them.

These reservations are said to be thrown open. not thrown open at all. The Indians are allotted their lands, then the appraisement takes place, which requires about two years, and then the lands are sold or are offered for sale by lottery, and the persons who buy them have a certain length of time to go upon them—that is, another year. I am speaking from actual observation; I am speaking of the Indians of the Couer d'Alene Indian Reservation. Then these people settle down there free from taxation for any purpose by the State or county; and where is the fund to come from to provide for educational facilities, except-

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment-except this provision of 20 per cent to be taken from the Indian's money to educate, not the Indian's children, because he is out on his homestead, on his allotment, but to educate the white people that have come What for? To elevate the Indians? No; to trade with them, and to outtrade them, if they can. They are not only to expend this money of the Indians for building schools and for municipal improvements, but the Indian has no voice in it. Where does the fund come from? I will take the case of the Nez Perce Indian Reservation. There was the city of Nezperce, now a large and thriving place, which had to maintain its public schools for years by private subscription. There was no real estate that was taxable, and consequently there was very meager provision for education among those people. They have only recently obtained title to that land, so that there is taxable This bill does not contain any provision adequate to establish or maintain schools of any kind, whether they be graded schools or central schools or public schools, until after title has passed from the Government of the United States to the Indians or to the white men. I saw them there holding all sorts of social functions for the purpose of raising money enough to build a little schoolhouse. In a town in Idaho upon the Minidoka project we had the same thing. Suspended title is the bane of the people of this country. It affects their prosperity and retards their growth. There we had nothing but a little frame shack for several years, because nobody had title to the land; nobody had anything that could be taxed, and we maintained the schools there by personal subscription, although the people in the early stages of settlement upon the public domain are not as a rule in position to contribute to any pur-pose beyond the necessities of their own daily lives; they are not in a position to contribute to building schoolhouses; and the Government has made no adequate provision for schools, and the growth and settlement of the western country, whether it be upon the reclamation projects or upon the Indian reservations, has been retarded a generation in every instance where the Government has undertaken to deal with these people.

I speak for the little country schoolhouse. It is the founda-tion of our white civilization. It ought to be made the foundation of the civilization of the red man. It is an injustice to take a dollar from these people. As a matter of fact, they hold that land under a treaty with the United States. We are about entering upon the consideration of treaty relations with people beyond the sea. It is a pretty cold-blooded proposition to say that, because these Indians are not of sufficient strength or importance or consequence, we will deal with them without their consent or without their participation. That is the Indian situation. It is time that a sense of justice should be awakened in the people, so that these people, who were contemplated in the Constitution of the United States to be a separate nation, with all the rights of another nation, and so referred to, and their rights preserved under the Constitution of the United States—I say it is time that we should realize that they are not fit subjects for legislative brigandage.

Mr. President, I have always perhaps felt warmer than I should about this question, but I have seen Indian tribes suffer and freeze and starve and go unhoused in the winter simply because of the injustice and the ingratitude of our Government and those who represent it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.
Mr. GRONNA. Did I understand the Senator to say that this bill provides that sections 16 and 36 can be set aside?

Mr. HEYBURN. It provides that they shall be sold. Mr. GRONNA. That was provided for in the enabling act. Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I will not go back to the enabling act; I will not attempt to reflect upon the wisdom or the justice of those who created the States of North and South Dakota. We fought out the same class of questions in our own State. With us it was supposed that the sixteens and thirty-sixes belonged to the United States, whether within or without the reservation; but we came up against an unusual and unexpected situation: The title to the Indians was not the same in every case. For instance, the reservation to which I have referred in the State of Idaho was created by an Executive order, and another was created by a treaty with the Indians. In the Colville Reservation-

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President— Mr. HEYBURN. 'The Senator will pardon me a moment, because it is not a new question. I have been through the courts with it, and I know something of what the courts hold in regard In the case of the Colville Indian Reservation, under whose jurisdiction our reservation rested for a long time, it had been created by an Executive order, and the question was as to the quality of title those people had.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, the 20 per cent provision simply applies to the lands that are held for town purposes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not discussing that; I was discussing a larger phase of the question.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; but, Mr. President, sections 16 and 36

now belong to the State under the enabling act, and I hardly think we can change that.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a close question. It has been held to be a close question in this body and in the committees of this body as to whether or not sections 16 and 36 within Indian reservations were within the grants to the States or to the Territories which afterwards became States. As I have said, that is a close question. We differ about it. Perhaps the Senator and I might agree, but I know other Senators would differ, and the department has not been uniform in its holdings as to whether or not the sixteens and thirty-sixes passed to the States, subject to the Indian rights, and would become the property of the State absolutely when the Indian title was extinguished. It is not necessary to go into that question in discussing the educational features of this bill.

I should like to see all of these bills provide that a certain portion of the money paid to the Indians should be held as a sacred fund for the purpose of establishing and maintaining day schools upon Indian reservations. There is no necessity on earth in this hour for anything further or beyond day schools for the Indian. That is the place to educate him, where what he learns in the schoolhouse during the day goes home to be talked over at night. He will advance more rapidly in that way than by being sent to some great, beautiful palace of a school for a year and then coming home to avoid or to squabble with other members of the household.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not finished.

Mr. BACON. Then I do not wish to interrupt the Senator. Mr. HEYBURN. I may have said enough, but I have not said quite all I want to say.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, no dollar that is realized out of the sale of what belongs to the Indians should be used to the exclusion of the Indians by or on behalf of white people or their children. Why is this limitation that the fund may be used in the town where the town lots are sold? The people that go to a town will go there not as pioneers and settlers, but as people equipped to do business, presumably with a fund on hand. They can contribute for maintaining schools or building them, but the 20 per cent provision in the bill would provide a very large sum of money. It would constitute a fund the income from which would build and maintain public day schools upon the Indian reservations until the Indians themselves become civilized and able to maintain themselves.

Mr. GAMBLE. I wish, Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho would prove a true prophet and that that all would come true, but it would be a very insignificant amount at best.

There will be only one or two or three

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, that would be very proper as a valedictory in the discussion of this question, but I prefer to develop the idea that I was pursuing for a moment

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho prefers

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that there is a spirit of doubt and skepticism as to what can be done with the Indians, and yet I have seen them advance to a standard equal with the whites. I can name Indians in the Nez Perce Reservation who are as well equipped to-day, because of having had school and educational facilities, as any man. I can name lawyers who practice at the bar and hold their own with the best; engineers who follow their profession and serve the Government when it needs service; I can name some of all the classes that are engaged in all the industries that other men pursue, but they are the exceptions. I am talking about a general educational uplift that shall give all the Indians an opportunity to receive what all of our race receive—the benefit of the public day schools. I want to emphasize that; I want to it to find a resting place in the minds not only of those who hear me, but of those who may read my remarks.

It is the day school we want for the Indian; and we ought to provide for establishing and maintaining it when there is the only opportunity for making it; and that is when their estate is being administered upon, and that is this hour.

We are administering upon the estate of a great tribe. I do not know the number in this tribe now, but I participated through the census in ascertaining the number of Indians in the Ogallala Sioux Tribe, the Red Cloud Sioux, and there were a little over 12,000 Indians. I think this tribe probably is not now so large. I think the Ogallalas were the largest of the nine Sioux tribes. But I do know that had these Indians in the days I knew them personally and was with them daily and a part of their daily life-a good bit more than 30 years ago-been given the opportunity that the children of our race are given in the public schools, the day schools, they would to-day no longer be wards of the Nation; they would be an independent, self-sustaining people.

So much for those Indians. There is a larger percentage of good men and good women among the Ogallala Sioux Indians than there is among any equal number of white people on the earth. Their code of morals is higher. I do not know where they get it. But I know they do not stand alone. There are other tribes. We generally find them judged by isolated cases of recklessness or ignorance which mark individuals. My heart and my sympathy are with those people, and I shiver when I see them thus stripped of that which they had before a white man stepped upon the shores of this country, stripped of it for the benefit of self-serving white men; and I will not see their lands taken and diverted for the use of white men-to their exclusion-without a protest.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there are only a few matters which I wish to call to the attention of the Senate and which I regard as worthy of the attention of the Senate.

I simply speak, in passing, of the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana that these lands would not be sold in fee, that the title would be held in suspense, and therefore there would be no opportunity to tax the property and from that taxation realize the funds necessary for the support of the schools. I desire simply to call attention to the fact that in section 5 there is a distinct provision that those who desire to do so can commute their entries and pay the cash, so that if it is their desire to establish the schools they can easily take title to the land and thus find the means through taxation of the property.

Mr. GAMBLE. That would require a period of 14 months. Mr. BACON. Very well. Here is the main thing I wish to call attention to, and it was the main matter in the discussion had in the last Congress. My recollection was somewhat indistinct, but it is brought back by the terms of this bill. I had an indistinct recollection that there was a provision in the bill by which the State of South Dakota was to profit very largely in money at the expense of the United States Government. did not recollect exactly what the provisions were. However, I now recall the point, and if I am in error of course the Senator from South Dakota will correct me.

We have heretofore been talking about an injustice to the Indians. Now we have something to consider as an injustice to the United States Government. The Senate will remember that I asked the Senator from South Dakota with reference to the exchange which this bill authorizes where any parts of section 16 or 36 have been allotted to Indians or the titles have in some other way been incumbered; such a claim as a squatter or anybody else could put in.

Mr. GAMBLE. A squatter would be absolutely prohibited.
Mr. BACON. Let me make my statement, and then the Senator can interrupt me if I am not correct. I asked the Senator from South Dakota what would be the case where any of these sections, sections 16 or 36, had its title or its possession in such condition that it would not be available by the State for the purposes contemplated in the enabling act; would it then be authorized to go and select, without any limitation, any other sections it might see proper to select, regardless of the value? The Senator replied "yes," but that it was under the control of the Secretary of the Interior; and further, that as sections 16 and 36, which may have been taken by other people, as it would naturally be the best, and would be taken for that reason, therefore the other sections selected could not be better than those, and it would not be necessary to put into the bill a provision that the lieu lands should not exceed in value sections 16 and 36, which had been taken.

That looked like a very simple proposition, where it was a question of the State taking the lands, although, as suggested by me, if the lands which the State had the opportunity to take could not be better than the State had lost for its public-school establishment in the loss of sections 16 and 36, there would be no harm to provide in this bill that the sections thus taken by the State should not be superior in value to such sections 16 and 36. But it is altogether a different thing when we come to consider the provisions of this bill.

Its provisions contemplate that the United States Government shall pay to the State of South Dakota the value of these lands. The bill says that sections 16 and 36 shall be paid for at the rate of $2.50 an acre, but there is no provision that when the Government comes to pay for the land which the governor may select in lieu of sections 16 and 36 the Government shall be limited to the payment of $2.50 an acre.

Mr. GAMBLE rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed. If he desires to answer me, I prefer he would wait until I am through. Of course, if he wants to correct me as to a fact, I will now submit to such a correction.

Mr. GAMBLE. Under a proper construction of the bill— Mr. BACON. That is an answer. Mr. GAMBLE. And in the States in the opening of many of these reservations, such has been the universal practice

Mr. BACON. I have not stated in full the proposition, nor have I stated the grounds upon which I base the proposition. There is a provision in this bill that these lands shall be appraised. The appraisement is not limited to $2.50 an acre, but the lands are to be sold for what they are worth on the market. I do not know what lands in South Dakota may be worth, but judging from the value of similar lands in adjacent States, I should say that the rich prairie lands of South Dakota were valuable for agricultural purposes.

The bill goes on and provides that this substitution shall be made when any one of these sections, 16 or 36, shall have been lost—how? Either "by reason of allotment thereof to any Indian or Indians or otherwise." If that is not a broad and unlimited expression, I do not know what fs. It covers squatter title and everything else.

Whenever section 16 or 36 has been lost to the State, the Government, according to this bill, will furnish-

Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. No; not now. I decline to yield until I finish the sentence

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. I will not yield in the middle of a sentence. will yield to the Senator when I get through. But I will have to repeat my sentence now in order that I may preserve the continuity of statement.

The provision is that whenever section 16 or 36 has been lost to the State, the Government shall pay to the State $2.50 an acre, and then, where there has been a loss of section 16 or 36 to the State through allotment to Indians or otherwise, the governor of the State may select other sections in lieu thereof without limitation as to where they shall be located or the value, and there shall be paid for them by the United States Government to the State of South Dakota according to the valuation placed upon them, and the sum of $180,000 is appropriated for that purpose.

Now I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment. I thought the Senator was conflicting the payment of this money to the Indians with the payment to the State.

Mr. BACON. No; I was not. Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Se If the Senator will pardon me, the proceeds of the sale of these lands go to the Indians.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. None of it goes to the State.
Mr. BACON. I understand that. The mistake of the Senator illustrates the importance of his waiting until I made my statement before interrupting me. I was not upon any such line as that suggested by him. The provision I was speaking of is the one for the payment to the State. I will read it. I recollect now that it was the bone of contention heretofore. recollect that there was a very large sum involved. I have not previously had an opportunity to read the bill. I have read it merely while the discussion was going on. I will read sections 6 and 9, which cover these two points:

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of the land in each township within the tract described in section 1 of this act shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $2.50 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively, for such purpose and in case any of said sections or parts thereof are lost to either of the said States by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians or otherwise, the governor of each of said States, respectively, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized, within the area described in section 1 of this act, to locate other lands not otherwise appropriated, which shall be paid for by the United States, as herein provided, in quantity equal to the loss, and such selections shall be made prior to the opening of such lands to settlement.

Of course the Indians do not get that. The States of North and South Dakota get that-

Howbeit-at $2.50 an acre? It does not so state. Put it in the bill if that is the case.

Mr. GAMBLE. Put it in.

Mr. BACON. And then I will ask the Senator to see if it is true that $187,000 is necessary for the payment of that land.

Mr. GAMBLE. The report shows the area of land, both in North Dakota and South Dakota, in sections 16 and 36, and it is computed upon that basis, and it aggregates $180,000.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator how many acres of land there are in the area specified? How many acres are included in sections 16 and 36?

Divide $180,000 by $2.50 and you will get Mr. GAMBLE. the product. I think it is stated in the report. It is computed in the report.

Mr. ROOT. Seventy-two thousand acres.

Mr. GAMBLE. About 72,000 acres. Mr. BACON. The appropriation is in this language:

Sec. 9. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $180,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as provided in section 7 of this act. And there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making the appraisement and classification.

Now, it may be as the Senator says, that it does intend that it shall be $2.50 an acre, but it does not say so. On the contrary, I should say that a legal construction would be that it should be paid for according to the appraisement, because it refers to the appraisement as herein provided, in speaking of

Mr. GAMBLE. I will say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that if he has any misapprehension or any question on that point, such an amendment as he suggests would be entirely acceptable.

Mr. BACON. I do not myself offer the amendment.

Mr. GAMBLE. But I might say that this same provision has been in a great many different bills opening reservations, and such has been the rule and the universal form.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill whether it would not be a proper amendment to say absolutely that the price of the land to be paid for to the State by the United States should not exceed $2.50 an acre.

Mr. GAMBLE. "To locate other land not otherwise appropriated, which shall be paid for by the United States, as herein provided, at $2.50 an acre." Let that go in line 7-"not exceeding $2.50 an acre.'

Mr. BACON. That cures that evil, but it does not cure the devotion of one-fifth of the proceeds of the town lots to school purposes at the expense of the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. I think it a very wholesome provision. It simply tides over the condition temporarily, and it is a very minor matter. There are only two or three town sites, and some of the lots in those will not be sold.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, petty larceny is just as objectionable as grand larceny, and if this does not belong to those people and does belong to the Indians the fact that it is a small matter will not excuse us for retaining it in this bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. The feeling of the department, which has had large experience in the sale of town lots, especially in Oklahoma, is that a provision of this kind would promote the sale and enhance the price of the lots sold and would temporarily tide it over.

Mr. BAILEY. Without having the Oklahoma act before me, I am of opinion that it contained no provision of that kind. The Senator remembers, of course, that it provided for the sale of town lots long before they opened that country to settlement and even before they allotted those lands in severalty. I was not on the committee having charge of the matter, and as I have never had special occasion to examine it, I challenge the Senator's statement with very great reluctance and not with any great confidence.

Mr. GAMBLE. I recall this in connection with these very matters: Information was received from the department as to the amount of money received from the sale of different town sites in our own State and also in Oklahoma, and there was, except a very limited number of them, a small amount realized.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if there is one chapter in our legislative history which a proud American citizen could read with less satisfaction than any other, it must be the one which recites the story of congressional dealings with the Indian Territory and the Indian lands in Oklahoma. I know myself of instances where men paid a mere pittance for lots under that act, and then, almost before the ink was dry upon the deed conveying them, they sold them for five and six times as much as they had paid the Indians. It was a clear theft, practiced upon a helpless and ignorant people, and I for one am heartily ashamed of that transaction.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. HEYBURN. I will say the point is clearly apparent in this bill that they are going to sell this land for many times what they pay the Indians, and I can say to the Senator that in a recent opening of a reservation in the Northwest the land brought more than six times as much to the white men as they paid the Indians for it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I did not think that the country known as the Indian Territory ought to have been opened. I had a sentiment about it. Those people had gone there under what they believed to be the guaranty of the Government that they might inhabit it as a tribe, to follow the language of the grant, so long as the grass grows and the waters run. obligation, I felt, ought to have been kept as sacredly as any engagement this Government had ever made. Indeed, I felt that I would be far more justified in breaking a treaty with a great and powerful nation than with those helpless and dependent people.

But after a certain number, and a large number, of white people had gone in there, if not encouraged by the Government to go at least permitted by it to go, it became apparent that the country could never be again controlled by the Indians, and it was an anomaly both in government and in civilization to see a large number of American citizens living without the protection of any form of government.

Under that condition, and compelled by it, I felt myself that it was just and sensible to sell those town lots and to permit the organization of municipalities there, so that obvious public duties might be discharged by the people living in that country.

But I never consented, I rejoice to say, that those lots should be taken from the people to whom they belonged at a small fraction of their fair value. I do not, however, think the injustice in that case was aggravated by the further proposal to take one-fifth of all they brought and devote it to the education of the children of the men who had gone there to take from them their inheritance.

I do not know how often this provision has heretofore appeared in acts like this. The Senator from South Dakota, who is familiar with these matters, says it has frequently appeared. All that I have to say is that every time it did appear in such a measure was once too often. It may be generous to give what belongs to us, but it is not honest to give what belongs to other people. If the Government of the United States, opulent as it is, chooses to give the people of the Dakotas $180,000 or $1,800,000 without any equivalent, that may not be wise, but it would be perfectly honest, and we might take to ourselves the credit for being generous in such an act. But when we give to those people one farthing that does not belong to us, but belongs instead to a helpless, dependent people, it is not generous, it is not just. It is what if an individual were to do would fall within the denunciation of the criminal statute.

If the Senator from South Dakota or myself were guardians for these Indians, and, moved by a generous spirit, we would give 20 per cent of their lands to some who might come amongst them, when we came to account to the court for the manner in which we had performed our duty toward our wards we would be compelled to make restitution.

For my part, Mr. President, I can not consent to do as a legislator what I would not be permitted to do in the personal or legal capacity of a guardian for those people.

I hope the Senator will agree to strike out that provision. If he expects to provide that the United States shall pay out of its own Treasury an amount equal to that, that will raise another question about which we may differ, but at least the money is ours, and we have a right to do with it as we please. We can exercise over that the right of a proprietor, but here we can only exercise the right of a trustee.

I myself know how those Senators from that part of the country feel about the settlement of these Indian reservations. They are, as it were, almost a barrier, arresting the progress and civilization of those sections; and I have long since believed that we have reached the time when the Indian must stand with this civilization of ours or else he must fall before it. I hope that these Indians are ready to stand with it; and I am ready to destroy the local and peculiar character of that region and incorporate it into the body of the State, just as I assume these Indians by their allotments are to become citizens of the United States and of those States. But as we destroy this last vestige of a former civilization, which, with all its savage atrocity, yet had many delightful phases, let us not signalize it by an act of palpable injustice, or, to use a mild phrase, by misappropriation of their money or their lands. Let us strike that out, and then I think the Senator from South Dakota will find nobody objecting to the passage of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary. In section 3, on page 5, line 21, the committee proposes to strike out "twenty-five," before the words "per cent," and in lieu to insert "twenty," so as to make the section

Sec. 3. That before any of the land is disposed of, as hereinafter provided, and before the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively, shall be permitted to select or locate any lands to which it may be entitled by reason of the loss of sections 16 or 36, or any portions thereof, by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from said lands such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause same to be surveyed into lots and blocks and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe; and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any town site, and patents shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes upon receiving satisfactory evidence that said towns have been duly incorporated. The purchase price of all town lots sold in town sites, as hereinafter provided, shall be paid at such time and in such installments as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, and he shall cause at least 20 per cent of the net proceeds arising from such sales to be set apart and expended under his direction in the construction of schoolhouses or other public buildings or improvements in the town sites in which such lots are located. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lots and lands within the town sites as aforesaid shall be credited to the Indians as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I observe in the report a letter from the Department of the Interior, dated April 5, 1910, which recommends that a fixed price be set upon different classes of agricultural lands. That recommendation does not appear to have been adopted by the committee. I presume they had reasons which seemed good to them for not adopting it.

But we have been told here of very grave abuses in the sale of Indian lands, the purchase of their lands at a very low price to come to them or to their benefit, and the immediate sale of the same lands at a very high price to come to the purchaser. I suppose every one of those cases occur in the course of the execution of a law which was enacted by Congress in the belief that the rights of the Indians were protected.

It creates in me a desire to reconsider the policy which permitted those laws, to consider whether the form of the laws under which these abuses occurred could not be improved; and as the Secretary of the Interior has suggested the provision pointed directly to the price of the lands, I am led to inquire whether it would not be practical in the provision for an appraisement of the lands to insert also a provision that they should be appraised at not less than a sum fixed for agricultural lands of the first class and another sum fixed for agricultural lands of the second class, and so on, so that, so far as we are concerned, we should do what is possible for us to prevent any very great abuse occurring at the hands of any appraiser who may take up the subject upon executive ap-

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from New York will permit me just here, I will say that we made that mistake very honestly and in good faith, but for the very reason that we make so many similar mistakes. Congress seems to shrink from the task of fixing any definite rule for anything.

In the Oklahoma or in the Indian Territory town-site case they deliberately provided for the undervaluation of the lots, but they sought in a measure to remedy that injustice to the Indian by confining the privilege to people who had improved the lots, and they recognized the hardship that would grow out of Congress's inaction. Men had gone there and for years had bought those lots and settled those towns, although there was not the semblance of an authority in law for the purchase and sale of that property. But men had built houses two or three and in some places even four story buildings, that had cost $25,000 and $30,000, upon the lots to which they had no shadow of a legal title. Towns of five and six thousand people had grown up there; and Congress, recognizing that it had permitted those people to go there and to engage in the purchase and sale of those lots, sought in some measure to correct its own mistake.

But if the Senator from New York feels curious enough to follow that bad practice of establishing a general rule and then allowing all this latitude, he will find that it mars all of the legislation which we enact. Without having examined it specifically with any special view, I will venture to say that in the last six years in three-fourths of the offices we have authorized we have not fixed the salary; we have not even fixed the number in many instances; but we have authorized certain officers of the department and heads of departments to designificant of the department and heads of departments to design. nate men and fix their salaries, and in other instances we have authorized the President to do it. That bad practice grows out of the fact that Congress seems averse to the task of making definite rules of action.

I want to excuse Congress in some measure for that kind of misconduct. It is largely attributable to the fact that all we do here is done in a hurry; all we do in the committees is done in a hurry, because the American Congress has more to do than any body of men on earth can do and do it right. When we get through with our correspondence and go to our committees we have so little time there to perfect our legislation that we come in with a bill of this kind and but one member of the committee comes to enlighten us about it. I do not criticize the other members of the committee, although I really feel that the Senate is entitled to the judgment of every man on each committee when a matter of any importance comes to this body.

It is impossible for men to do all that we have to do, and that is how it happens that the courts are continually kept guessing what we mean by our legislation; we legislate in such a hurry. We come from our desks to the committee room, and where we ought to spend two and three hours upon a measure we spend a third of that time. We bring it into the Senate not even expressed in language which does credit to our vocabulary. I think I am safe in saying that the legislation of no enlightened body in the world is quite so awkwardly ex-pressed as our own; and it is due almost entirely to the fact that we are overworked. Yet we are continually adding to our work. With a children's bureau bill and an infinite variety of legislation that ought never to have found its way into the American Congress, day after day we are adding to our already impossible task.

If the Senator from New York sits here as long as I hope he will, unless a Democrat will succeed him, and the right kind of a Democrat at that, he will experience a very much better reason for the complaint that he has just made. It is a complaint that has risen to the lips of every man who has served for any length in this body, although we have not always taken the trouble to express it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am heartily in agreement with what the Senator from Texas has just said. I think that instead of endeavoring to take upon the Government of the United States new duties which are not thrown upon us by necessity we should endeavor to do better the things that we have already become bound to do.

As to this particular matter, it is one regarding which I know very little, but I would like to know whether in this bill we are doing anything more than was done in the legislation which made possible the atrocious outrages which have been mentioned by Senators upon this floor to-day. What is there in this bill that will prevent the very same thing from being done again?

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, this bill in its main provisions is substantially the same as other bills covering the same subject matter. I speak simply from the information and knowledge I have in opening reservations in my own State in regard to the prices fixed on the lands. A commission is appointed, and the appraisements have been fair, and in some cases I think the appraisement of the land has been too high. If the settlers were going upon desirable lands, all opened to white people who go in and cooperate with him in upbuilding that particular community, that is one proposition, Mr. President. But here the settler goes into a community where maybe one-quarter, onethird, one-half, or perhaps three-fourths of the lands in that particular township are taken by Indians, and their lands are relieved from taxation for a period of 25 years. Schools are to And I will say to the distinguished Senator from be provided. Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that South Dakota has always been most solicitous as to the education of its children, white or red. In the percentage of illiteracy she stands within a slight fraction of possessing the smallest illiteracy of any of the States in the Union

If highways are to be built, if township organizations and county organizations are to be maintained, these settlers bear the burdens independently of the Indians. If corruption, if wrongdoing have been prevalent, as far as the settler is concerned it has not come under my observation in the opening of lands in my State under the provisions of acts of practically the same identical character.

As far as fixing a set price for the lands, that is highly improper and inequitable, in my judgment. With intelligent, competent appraisers, who personally go on and value the lands, their appraisement being subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior, it seems to me it is the wise and the safe provision to follow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be offered to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BACON. I ask for a vote on the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr GAMBLE. I ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

So the Senate refused to pass the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. I give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill failed to bass.

PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES COINS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4651) to amend section 171 of the penal laws of the United States approved March 4, 1909.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 171 of the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909, so as to read as follows:

Sec. 171. Whoever within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall bring therein from any foreign country, or shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever, in the likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription thereon of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money, either under the authority of the United States or under the authority of any foreign Government, shall be fined not more than $100. But nothing in this section shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals or the making of the necessary plates for the same to be used in illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and school arithmetics and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask just what the amendment of the law is that is proposed?

Mr. SWANSON. I will state very succinctly. Under the present law it is impossible to have any impressions, prints, tokens, or devices of the coins of the United States in school arithmetics. You can have them in journals and circulars issued by anybody who sells coins and in historical works and other publications, but you can not have them in school arithmetics, where the value of coins is taught. There is a publishing company-

Mr. LODGE. That is the only amendment of the law?

Mr. SWANSON. That is the only amendment. It simply inserts "school arithmetics." There is now a publishing company that has issued many thousand books that will be affected by the amendment of the law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 30, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 29, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, possess us, we beseech Thee, with Thy spirit, that our minds may be illumined and our hearts quickened to the broader views of life and its farreaching purposes; that we may widen the sphere of our ac-tivities through every legitimate channel and thus add some-what to the sum of human happiness and develop the God that is in us until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 27, 1912, was read and account.

1912, was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the reference of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the War Department for military posts and barracks and quarters for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 482), was changed from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Rees, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. Hanna, for 10 days, on account of important business. To Mr. Needham, for 2 days, on account of sickness. To Mr. Slemp, for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 270), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves all points of order on the bill.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 271), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill II. R. 18642.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18642, to revise the metal schedule. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18642, to revise the metal schedule, with Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas in the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on Saturday night I took the gentleman from Ohio off his feet in the midst of his speech. I should like to ask him how much time he now desires.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should like to have 10 minutes. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, unlike the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett], who has recently addressed us, I am not fortified by an excellent dinner and have, therefore, no intention of unduly prolonging this debate. I however feel it my duty to say a word on this subject.

If there was any reason for the placing of any of these articles contained in this paragraph upon the free list, it does not apply to machine tools. If it is possible that cash registers and articles of that sort have a monopoly, either through patents or otherwise, and that that is the reason for placing them on the free list, the argument does not apply to machine tools. It is a great industry, Mr. Chairman, in this country, and it is an industry concerning which there never has been the suggestion of a monopoly. On the contrary, the competition throughout that industry is fierce—as fierce as in any industry. It is greatly diversified. It employs thousands upon thousands of American citizens as workmen. It has an enormous amount of capital invested in it, and it is all working capital.

And yet in this bill the entire finished product of this industry and yet in this bit the earthe hinshed product of this industry is placed upon the free list, at the same time retaining the duties upon every intermediate product that goes into it. That is not logic, Mr. Chairman. It is indefensible from any point of view or from any theory. It will be no argument to say, as some gentlemen may, that there is a negligible importation into this country of machine tools and that there is a large exportation from this country. The machine-tool industry bears now a reasonable protection. Unlike many other manufacturers, the makers of machine tools appeared before the Ways and Means Committee three years ago and consented that the present duty be reduced from 45 to 30 per cent. They now have 30 per cent, and if they are able to exist and export largely it is because they have a reasonable protection upon their finished products. Whether it is said on that side of the House or not, Mr. Chairman, that they do not need protection, I prefer to listen to those men themselves. I have in my pocket a large number of telegrams which I have received upon this subject, all saying that the placing of machine tools on the free list will ruin the industry.. These telegrams are as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1912.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Business Men's Club of Cincinnati remonstrates against the contemplated passage by Congress of the so-called steel schedule. It's passage would work an irreparable injury to the machine-tool industry of Cincinnati. Action should be deferred until a careful and scientific investigation of the subject is made. A delegation is en route to personally enter a vigorous protest. Business conditions do not warrant trying experiments at this time.

CHAS. A. HINSCH, Vice President and Acting President.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1912.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We protest against placing of machine tools on free list, as proposed in Palmer bill, coming before the House Monday, as a serious blow to one of the principal industries of our city. Cincinnati delegation en route to Washington with facts and figures to sustain protest. Any revision should be only after a scientific investigation of the difference in cost here and abroad. We urge your opposition to this provision.

THE CINCINNATI COMMERCIAL ASSOCIATION, DAVID C. JONES,

Chairman Industrial Committee. CARL DEHONEY, Secretary and Manager.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 27, 1912.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth, M. C., Wasnington, D. C.:

Please wire what steps we can take to effectively enter protest against reduction of tariff on machine tools, included in steel bill. Passing this bill will ruin the machine-tool business in Cincinnati and the country in general; also reduce wages and cause wholesale discharge of emin gene ployees.

CINCINNATI BICKFORD TOOL CO.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 27, 1912.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 27, 1912.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We desire to enter our protest against the passage by Congress of the measure placing machine tools on the free list and ask that you use your influence to defeat same, thereby reserving for manufacturers the opportunity of making reasonable profits and for their employees reasonable compensation.

WILLARD MACHINE & TOOL Co., G. A. WILLARD, President.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 27, 1912.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Rumored here that new steel tariff schedule introduced this week places machine tools on free list. This would be an unquestioned catastrophe to this industry, of which Cincinnati is headquarters. Please wire quick, our expense, what duty is proposed by new bill on machine tools. Now protected 30 per cent by Payne law. Forward quick copy of proposed bill. What practical method should machine-tool industry pursue to present facts in protest?

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 27, 1912.

Hon. Nicholas Longworth,

1736 M Street, Washington, D. C.:

Passage steel Schedule C will seriously imperil machinery-tool industry, now none too profitable; lower wages. The workman must follow. We protest earnestly against it.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

We are astounded to learn that a bill will be presented in the House of Representatives on next Monday proposing to remove the duty on machine tools. Under the present duty machine tools are being imported to German houses in New York, namely, Schuchardt & Schutte and Alfred H. Schutte, doing an increasing business. Labor cost is far greater than material cost in the building of most machine tools. Consequently, with broadened market and much lower wage rate, both England and Germany would make great inroads on our trade. Both our domestic and foreign trade would suffer. We consider such a proposition disastrous, and earnestly ask your influence for its delay pending impartial consideration of facts.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Washington, D. C.:

We hereby protest against the passage of new steel schedule putting machine tools on free list. Machine-tool manufacturers and our members would be disastrously affected. Machine-tool manufacturers our largest customers. Comparative cost in this country and abroad should be carefully investigated before any change is made.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1912.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Cincinnati Metal Trades Association, composed of 100 manufacturers, employing 20,000 men, protest against the passage new steel schedule placing machine tools on free list. Cincinnati manufacturers en route and should be given opportunity to present better a careful and scientific investigation of the cost of the manufacture of machine tools abroad and at home. Will so propose. Schedule disastrous to machinetool builders; it is one of our largest industries.

Henry Ritter, President.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1912.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

If Congress passes bill taking duty off machine tools our business will suffer and wages and mechanics will fall in order to meet foreign competition. Cincinnati is the largest machine-tool manufacturing city in the world and this city will suffer seriously; action should be post-poned until scientific investigations would show whether a reduction is justifiable. Wages in Europe permit them to undersell us and produce machines cheaper than we can, and cost investigation of the production will prove that present tariff is low enough.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,

Washington, D. C.:

All American machine-tool manufacturers certainly oppose new steel bill as it now reads. By including machine tools in this bill you are not fighting trusts but taking the livelihood from 15,000 men in this city alone. Suggest thorough investigation first of costs here and abroad. Kindly keep us informed.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Chamber of Commerce urges no hasty action on tariff on machine tools. Cincinnath, largest tool-manufacturing center in world, would be seriously affected by any sudden disarrangement of business conditions in that line. Labor is largest percentage of cost of products. This and other peculiarities of business makes special treatment after careful inquiries desirable. Urge delay until Cincinnati manufacturers now en route to Washington have opportunity of presenting machinetool builders' argument.

CINCINNATI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, WALTER A. DRAPER, President.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1912.

Hon. NICK LONGWORTH, Washington, D. C .:

Our club is desirous of protecting the reasonable interests of our manufacturers, and especially solicitious to safeguard the present good wages of our skilled labor. Therefore we hope it is consistent with your views and intentions to ask you to oppose the features of the new steel tariff calling for immediate reductions on machinery and all such goods so largely manufactured here. Our protest is against any action without most careful investigation of comparative cost, environments here and abroad. Your compliance and cooperation will be sincerely environments. appreciated.

THE MANUFACTURERS' CLUB OF CINCINNATI, W. F. ROBERTSON, President.

I am willing to believe those gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, rather than the alleged tariff experts upon the other side of the aisle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, among other things that are contained in these telegrams, are inquiries addressed to me as to how effective protest can be made against and prevent the passage of this legislation. Even if these gentlemen were in time, they could not effectively protest against the passage of this legislation, because no opportunity was given to them or to any others to protest; and my sole advice to these men and to all men who desire the protection of American industry and of American labor is to turn out the majority of this House and vote in the Republican Party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Alabama stated, I was taken from my feet on Saturday night—and very proposition of the state o erly, as Sunday was approaching—while I was discussing the amendment that I had offered to take machine tools from the free list in this bill. I desire now to restate, as briefly as possible, the grounds upon which I think my amendment ought to prevail.

In the first place, I think that the Committee on Ways and Means, or, rather, the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, for we of the minority were not consulted, acted through mistake of the facts in including machine tools in the free list. As I understand it, the ground for placing the completely finished product of any such industry upon the free list is or ought to be that it is a highly patented article or else that it is a monopoly. If there may be some excuse for cash registers, typesetting machines, sewing machines, and other articles of that sort which are protected by patents and which in some cases may be monopolies being placed upon the free in some cases may be monopolies being placed upon the free list, no such excuse can lie for the placing of machine tools upon the free list. If there is an industry in this country in which there is competition, and keen competition, it is in the production of machine tools. In my own State alone there are the free list the finished product of that industry, while we leave a duty upon every single material that goes into that industry. Of course, it will probably be said here that this industry exports largely. It is true that it does export largely. It is true also that the imports are relatively small. Yet is it any reason because an American industry, employing American labor, is able to export its product and to do business with the nations of the world why it should be penalized for sooth and its product placed upon the free list? Is it the object of this legislation to put a penalty upon success? I am proud of the fact that the machine-tool industry, under the reasonable protection it now enjoys of only 30 per cent, is able not only to do business in this country, but in other countries, and I see no reason why the men who have invested their capital in this industry and the workmen who earn American wages in that industry should be placed in free competition with all the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] Viewed from any standpoint except that of absolute free trade, there can be no theory upon which you can put the finished product of an American industry on the free list leaving a duty on all intermediate materials, for even from the free trader's point of view you must put upon the free list every article that goes into that industry. This is indefensible upon any theory that can be advanced. In fact, the whole proceeding under which we are now acting is, in my judgment, indefensible.

If legislation means deliberate consideration, then this is not legislation. It is legislation by ukase, and the czar who issues that ukase is none other than the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. We have heard much talk about czars in this House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Can-non], the former Speaker, was called a czar. Why, Mr. NON], the former Speaker, was called a czar. Why, Mr. Chairman, in so far as his control over his party in this House was concerned, he was a child compared to the gentleman from Alabama now. [Laughter.] As an amalgamator of opposing opinions, as a trainer and master of discordant and ordinarily utterly unmanageable elements, the renowned Prof. Hagenbeck is a child compared to the gentleman from Alabama. gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] knows my estimate gentieman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] knows my estimate of his abilities. On a previous occasion I stated in his presence what I thought of his ability as a leader. I stated then and I state now that the Democracy has not produced in years a parliamentary leader comparable with the gentleman from Alabama. [Applause.] I said then that when he pipes his colleagues dance [laughter], and from their complacent countenances as I see them now they seem glad to dance. I will go further upon this occasion and say that when dance. I will go further upon this occasion and say that when he pipes they not only dance but they lie down, roll over, and play dead. [Laughter.]

Now, I appeal to Cæsar. I appeal to no one but Cæsar himself, for it would be waste of breath. I ask him to undo this wrong, this wrong upon the American business man, this wrong upon the American workingman, that he has done them in this bill, and I trust that he will uplift his finger and permit my just amendment to be adopted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the reason that the Ways and Means Committee has placed this item on the free list is this: Two years or more ago, before the bill came before the House, when it was being investigated by the Ways and Means Committee, the Department of the Interior sent certain experts abroad to investigate the iron and steel business and the machinery business. A report was made at that time, which is now printed and on the files of the Ways and Means Committee, showing that machine tools made by American manufacturers were being exported in large quantities and sold in every country in Europe. They were sold not only in every country in Europe on equal competition with foreign manufactures, but in a great many countries of Europe, like Germany, and the American machine tool had to pay an adverse tariff rate before it was introduced into the competitive market.

More than that, it had to pay a high-class freight rate to get into that competitive market. It is not a commodity that can be shipped as ballast at a low freight rate, but it paid a high-class freight rate to go into the competitive markets of the world.

Now, the figures I had before me led me to believe that $100,000,000 worth of machine tools were made in the United States. But I have had a talk recently with a gentleman, who is in the business himself, and he says that is an overestimate; that there is only about $50,000,000 of machine tools made in the United States. The figures that are before me show that the nearly 50 different concerns making machine tools. There are over 12,000 American workmen in Ohio employed in making machine tools. There is nearly $15,000,000 worth of capital in Ohio invested in making machine tools. Yet in the making of a so-called revenue tariff we take here an industry and place upon this item, states that that amount is too great; that their exports only amount to about $5,000,000.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman not to interrupt me now. But take the case not on the basis of the figures of the Treasury Department, not on the basis of the experts that have heretofore investigated the matter, but on the statement of the gentlemen engaged in the business, and the total production is $50,000,000 and the exports amount to $5,000,000, or one-tenth of the total production in this country. These machine tools, as I have said heretofore, are being exported into the countries of Europe, where an adverse tariff is charged before they can come into the competitive market.

Now, the imports for the year 1910 amounted to only $177,000 and the imports last year were $191,000.

So here is a great industry, a very meritorious industry, a successful industry, that is going into the markets of the world, competing with its rivals abroad, no imports coming in here practically, and, in the judgment of the committee, there would be no imports coming in here to amount to anything if this item is left on the free list. Therefore, under these circumstances, your committee felt that they were justified in putting these items on the free list, because we did not see where we could get a reasonable revenue by putting even a very low tax on these items. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to close this bill this morning, and I move to close debate on this item.

Mr. FULLER. I trust the gentleman will not insist on that at the present time. I want five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman desire to speak upon this paragraph?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; on this amendment only.
Mr. STEENERSON. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I have an amendment to offer to this section.

Mr. MANN. I have several amendments.
Mr. SLOAN. I would like five minutes.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 30 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 10 minutes by myself.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not make that request yet.

Mr. STEENERSON. There will be several amendments of fered to this section.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to cut off amendments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I suggest that we dispose of this amendment first.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that there were gentlemen on that side who desired to speak to this amendment.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to this amendment, and I desire also to offer another amendment to the

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in view of the fact that we spent all day Saturday on this matter, and that most of us were prevented from speaking at that time, that we ought not to be buried now at the expense of a matter of 20 or 30 minutes. I would like to say a few words upon the It will not detain the gentleman more than 20 or 30 bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that I must insist upon cutting out debate on the bill upon other items. I am willing to consent to this paragraph being debated. That is the reason I want a limit to the debate. In order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] may have full opportunity for his side, I am willing to ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph run for 40 minutes, and all amendments offered to it may be considered as pending until the 40 minutes are out, 30 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and 10 minutes by myself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he has the power undoubtedly at any time to close debate. Why not let this run along to see whether proper debate is offered on the paragraph? This is a very important paragraph in the bill, covering a number of different items.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in 40 minutes, 30 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 10 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and that all amendments to the paragraph may be read and onsidered pending. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate now close on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, that all debate be now closed on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fuller] said he had an amendment of his own. I intend to let the gentleman speak on his own amendment.

I wish also to speak on this amendment.

Mr. FULLER. I wish also to speak on this amendment. Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] or on his own?
Mr. FULLER. On this amendment I desire to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] may be heard during those five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close within five minutes and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] occupy those five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that no hearings were had before the Committee on Ways and Means, and in view of the further fact that in my district there is a great manufacturing city where machine tools are made by something like a dozen different firms and corporations, where several thousand men are employed in that particular industry, whose employment and wages are threatened by this bill, I desire to present to the House very briefly some of the views which I have received this morning by telegraph from parties interested in the industry in the city of Rockford, Ill. I have this morning received the following telegrams upon that particular subject:

The adoption of the steel bill, placing machine tools on the free list, would be a serious menace to the machine-tool industry. American machine tools have been copied in foreign countries and enormous works are producing them in large quantities. They are being sold in those countries at prices much below our cost of production, and it is their practice to make low prices for export, which would mean that this country would be used as a dumping ground. We ask your earnest efforts to protect us.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee divided; and the tellers (Mr. Longworth and Mr. Underwood) reported that there were—ayes 72, noes 136. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the words "sewing machines."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 73, line 7, by striking out the words "sewing machines."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment to strike sewing machines from the free list, I do so for the reason that, in my opinion, if there is any one thing in this entire bill that ought not to be placed on the free list it is sewing machines. Under the Dingley Tariff Act sewing machines and sewingmachine parts were made dutiable at 45 per cent ad valorem. With that protective duty, which I concede was almost prohibitive so far as foreign competition was concerned, a great industry was built up in this country, and factories for the manufacture of sewing machines were established in many towns and cities, and the competition which ensued resulted in reducing the price of sewing machines very much below the prices at which they ever before had been sold. All experience which we have had in this country has demonstrated the fact that a protective tariff high enough to give the home market to home manufacturers has resulted universally in creating such competition as to reduce instead of enhancing prices to the consumer. For instance, you can buy to-day a better sewing machine for $10 or $12 than you could buy 50 years ago for $75 or $100. Under the Payne Tariff Act, which greatly reduced the duties all along the line, no matter what may be said to the contrary, the tariff on sewing machines and sewingmachine parts was reduced 50 per cent and the duty thereon fixed at 30 per cent ad valorem. The industry had grown until such reduction, in my opinion, was justified, but under this bill it is proposed to place these articles on the free list and give free competition with all the world. If it is the desire of Congress to do the greatest favor possible to the Sewing Machine Trust and the greatest injury possible to the smaller and independent concerns now competing with the Sewing Machine Trust, then this provision may well be retained in the bill. You will hear no objection to it whatever from the Singer Sewing Machine Co., which, it is said, manufactures 80 per cent of the world's product of sewing machines, and which has, besides its numerous factories in this country, one of the greatest sewing-machine plants in the world at or near Glasgow, Scotland, another in Canada, and possibly others in different parts of the world. Placing sewing machines on the free list would benefit that company and aid still further in consolidating the business in its hands, but it would work irreparable injury, if not absolute ruin, to the smaller independent con-cerns now competing with it. If this amendment prevails and sewing machines are stricken from the free list, it would leave them dutiable at 25 per cent ad valorem under the "basket clause" of the bill. The only people in the world who could be benefited by the placing of sewing machines on the free list would be the Sewing Machine Trust, or the Singer Sewing Machine Co., because they could then have the different parts of their machines manufactured in their factories abroad by the cheapest labor obtainable in the world and ship those parts into this country, to be assembled here and sold here to the American people, and thus very probably drive out of business every independent sewing-machine factory in the land and incidentally turn out of employment thousands upon thousands of the employees of these independent factories who are now receiving higher wages than such labor commands in any other country in the world. If it did not do this it would certainly compel a reduction of wages to the employees in these independent factories to the level of wages paid in other countries. There are two such independent sewing-machine factories in the district which I have the honor to represent. These companies are not connected in any way with any trust. They are independent the trust, and competition in this industry is severe and the profit extremely low. Let me say, because that question has been raised as to other gentlemen defending other interests, that I have no personal or financial interest whatever in any company manufacturing sewing machines, but as an American citizen I am interested in seeing that no wrong is done to any of the industries of my district or of this country, and that no favoritism shall be shown to foreign manufacturers or to foreign laboring men over those of our own country. Every gentleman knows, or should know, that these independent factories, which have been built up under the Republican doctrine of protection, have been instrumental not in increasing prices because of the protection afforded, but in creating home competition, and thereby greatly reducing prices. Some gentleman has said that the price of sewing machines was exorbitant and that great dividends have been paid. This may be true as to the so-called trust, the Singer Sewing Machine Co., but it is not true of the smaller independent concerns for which I am speaking.

I know from personal knowledge that the National Sewing Machine Co., which is the principal industry in the city in which I live, and the Illinois Sewing Machine Co., of Rockford, Ill., have never made exorbitant profits, have never been able to pay dividends which afforded more than a fair return on the capital invested; and I know they do not ask or obtain exorbitant prices for the machines they manufacture. I may truthfully say they have been the means, with other like
